High School can no longer be defined by four walls

Before games, after games, after school, sometimes even during school, students frequent Burger Chef to meet friends, enjoy a snack, and discuss school problems.

Eagle Creek Reservoir located near Northwest gave students a place to take a long walk, have a private talk, or get away from the crowd as shown by a young couple on a wintry day.

As a rider flashes by, participants in the Little 500 show concern for their teams position. Students experienced the fun, excitement, thrills, and disappointments involved in teamwork.

I ndianapolis by moonlight—the world can no longer be defined by the earth's surface; a city, by its skyline; a school, by its walls.

BRAINWORK

Doing research for term papers, preparing book reports, or studying for a class assignment—students took advantage of the expanded facilities of the library before, after school, and during study periods. Library use during study periods was limited for students receiving in any subject a failing mark for the grading period; this ruling caused much debate among students and teachers alike.

NORTHWEST MEASURE UP?

The North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary schools, a regional accrediting agency which operates in nine midwestern states, evaluated Northwest for the second time in the school's history.

The purpose of the evaluation, which occurs every seven years, was to determine if the curriculum, the faculty, and the educational program as a whole met the high quality standards set by NCA. The curriculum was judged on the basis of whether or not it met the individual needs of the students. The community's position in relation to the school's philosophy was taken into consideration, and the administration and faculty teaching methods were also appraised. Another responsibility of NCA was to determine if there was a wide enough variety of extra-curricular activities in which students could participate.

The entire evaluation consisted of three phases. The first phase was a self-evaluation of the faculty and classroom procedures. A team of administrators, teachers, and college officials completed the second phase in March when they visited and made an objective rating of Northwest. The final phase consisted of a study of the changes made as a result of the NCA evaluation.

Various committees were formed to aid in the faculty's self evaluation. Until his move to the principalship of Greenwood High school in January, Harold Crawford, vice-principal, acted as chairman of the steering committee. Principal Kenneth Smartz assumed Mr. Crawford's duties as chairman and director of guidance. The steering committee included: Mrs. Doris Bradford, English teacher; Peter Davis, guidance counselor; Mrs. Alice Hauss, physical education teacher; and Mrs. Judy Hinshaw, business education teacher.

Other members of the committee were: James Poalston, physical education department chairman; James Ray, English teacher and director of publications; Joseph Reynolds, art department chairman; and Mrs. Beverly Robinson, English teacher.

SCHOOL CURRICULUM ADJUSTS...

Research papers for English classes involved a great deal of work for teacher and student alike. After the student has taken notes, outlined, written and rewritten, the teacher must evaluate each paper individually, checking for content, form and grammar. Mrs. Doris Bradford tabulated the number of grammar errors committed by her English 7 classes, with the following results:

punctuation errors	2,221
spelling errors	819
incorrect use of pronoun	363
dangling modifiers	262
shifts in tense of verb	223
faulty parallelism	207
faulty diction	139
misplaced modifiers	125

To provide Northwest students with the most comprehensive education possible, several departments added new courses to the curriculum and employed new equipment as well as updated teaching methods.

Northwest's curriculum, which included 307 courses, was planned with the students' individual needs and interests in mind. Some courses were added to the curriculum by the request of the parents; for example, ROTC was initiated by the parents in 1968. Parents also suggested a course in automobile mechanics, but due to lack of sufficient automobile facilities, it was questionable if this course would become reality.

The English department, which assigned students to classes on the basis of teacher recommendations, reading test scores and IQ scores, concentrated its efforts on improved reading and spelling. English classes were given routine spelling and vocabulary tests and new reading machines were also used to increase reading speed and comprehension. In the spring, the English department organized mini-courses which lasted 10 days and were concerned with subjects including astrology, sports literature, creative writing, debate and impromptu speaking. These courses required no tests or homework and grades were based on the pass/fail system. The mini-courses helped students develop reading, writing, speaking and listening skills.

In keeping with this improved reading policy, students enrolled in French 9 read the full-length French novel, L'Etranger while Spanish students made in-depth studies of lessons offered in their textbooks. (continued, p. 18)

The science department furnished a number of Physics and Chemistry students with the opportunity to travel to the University of Chicago, November 13. While touring the university, these students examined the science facilities and listened to lectures on a wide range of topics.

For students completing General Math 1-2 and desiring to continue in math, Geometry IX was added to the curriculum. The math department also offered advanced computer math using the school's computer terminal and the basic machine language.

The business department obtained the first computer given to a school business department in Indianapolis. The new computer was used by data processing, machine calculus, and bookkeeping classes; teachers in this department received special training for its operation. Business opportunities, a new course which helped students recognize what vocations they were best suited for, was also added.

The Apprenticeship Information Center of the Indiana Security Division loaned the industrial arts department its films concerning apprenticeship programs. Students learned what programs were available and what the qualifications were for each.

The music department employed revised teaching methods with the A, B, and D bands and during specific grading periods, the Concert Choir adopted a self-grading system.

The library, which circulated approximately 1,339 of its 24,825 volumes monthly, completely changed its traditional image to that of a multi-media center. By compiling all audio visual equipment, pamphlets, overlays, and books in a single card catalogue, students were able to do all research work in one location. The library also obtained a copying machine which allowed students to duplicate materials as opposed to the usual routine of checking them out. In addition, new readers printers with microfilmed occupational briefs allowed students to discover job opportunities in the surrounding community.

Miss Cynthia Werner directed a new special education program which was created to provide certain students with individual attention. The program was divided into three classes composed of approximately 14 students each and dealt with such subjects as English, citizenship, and guidance. Students in these classes were allowed to pursue the different topics for extended periods of time.

ARE GRADES THAT

On February 3, 1972, an unusual overcrowding situation occurred at Northwest: the conference room adjacent to the main office, traditionally the site where principal Kenneth Smartz awarded certificates to straight "A" students for their work, could not accommodate the record 42 8.0 average students, and the group was forced to move to the science lecture hall. Compared with the first grading period at Northwest in 1963, when 157 achieved honor roll status, including one with an all-A record, the first semester final mark of 434 honor students in the 1971-72 year greatly surpassed the initial figure. At the other end of the grading scale, 471 students received one or more failing grades on the semester-end reports. But how well an F or straight A's define a student's abilities was a question that many, students and teachers alike, asked.

Through the years, educators have come to realize the necessity for effective methods of evaluating stu-

(e) Becky Moore, junior, Steve Gano, senior, and Judy Pierson, junior, spent two weeks in August at the Ball State Yearbook Workshop.

While most students were anxious for school to end, others faced the prospect of summer school which began the Monday after the regular school year ended. Of the 1100 students expected, 737 students made it through the hot summer months. This was one of the smallest numbers of students ever enrolled in summer school. Summer school principal George Gale said, "The reason for the drop in attendance in summer school was the fact that many students were unsure as to whether they would attend Northwest or Attucks in the fall."

Driver education was the most popular subject with 262 students enrolled; 70 per cent of the students in driver education took health, a required subject. Many of the students taking summer school did so to gain enough credits to graduate a semester early.

second best of the 94 high school yearbooks represented. Seniors Scott Daniels, Fred Miller, and Charles Van Sant, Telstar staff members, attended the Indiana University Newspaper workshop July 11-23 where they improved their writing and design skills. Charles received awards for good citizenship and newspaper editing.

Making uniforms and practicing every day from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. for two weeks this summer paid off for the Northwest Varsity Cheerleading Squad. Entering cheerleading competition at the Indiana State Fair for the first time, they were judged best in the state. Varsity and reserve cheerleaders also attended a 10-day institute at Vincennes University. Susan Pearson, varsity cheerleader, was named one of the top ten girls in the "Miss Cheerleader" contest at Vincennes. The girls participated in nightly competition and were awarded second and third place medals.

Boys State and Girls State, sponsored by the American Legion for high school juniors, was at Indiana State University June 13-20. Stacy Loncar, Sandy Smith, and Kathy Leamon, seniors, attended Girls State while Chris Galloway and Richard Schenck attended Boys State. These students were given the opportunity to learn the principles of government and to participate in mock elections.

Sponsored by the Indiana University Honors Abroad Program for high school students, Sharon Switzer, senior, spent eight weeks this summer in France. She spent one week of her stay in Paris enjoying the food, movies, and local places of interest. After a brief stay with a French family, where she acquainted herself with European customs, Sharon attended Lycee Technique d'Etat, a French high school where she furthered her studies of the language.

EDUCATION OFF WITH A WIND

TO THE VICTORS ...

The acceptance of an assortment of honorary titles and awards highlighted a number of Northwest students' high school careers.

Senior Gail Baker, one of the two students in the English department to achieve honors, won honorable mention in the National Council of Teachers English writing contest. Gail wrote a theme based on a pre-determined topic as well as submitting additional examples of her work. Missy Byron, junior, successfully competed in the Voice of Democracy Contest, sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars. In this contest, Missy was required to write and present a speech dealing with the theme "My Responsibility to Freedom."

Journalism students also participated in a wide range of contests offered at workshops held throughout the state. The Indiana High School Press Association sponsored one of these workshops at Franklin College where senior Fred Miller attained second place in the news writing division and Steve Gano, also a senior, acquired a second place trophy in yearbook design.

Results of the National Merit Scholarship test revealed the finalist status of Dennis Adams, Gail Baker, Sandra Conner, and Steve Gano, all seniors.

After mastering a standardized examination furnished by the General Mills Company, Diane Herkless, senior, also brought honor to Northwest when she was bestowed the title "Betty Crocker Future Homemaker of America." This title signified her eligibility along with 25 other girls for a state scholarship.

Northwest art students fared exceptionally well in the Regional Scholastic Art Awards Competition. Competing against approximately 4,000 art student's entries from a 51 county area, these students had 26 pieces of work chosen for exhibit, 13 of which received Gold Medals. Their work was displayed in the L.S. Ayres auditorium February 25 through March 4. Those receiving Gold Medals included: seniors Sue Nolton, Debbie Green, Gary Crist, Steve Corn, Ron Harris, and Leslie Malone, and juniors Laura Huber, Judy Hayden, and Greg Zeiher.

Competitors in the State Solo and Ensemble Contest were also rated outstanding. Among those who achieved first place in the various divisions were: clarinet—Jeff Smith, senior; snare drum—Jay Cummings and Keith Huston, seniors; snare drum and xylophone—senior Danny Paul; brass quintet—Gary Cirrincion, Jeff Downs, Phil Wright, Steve Russell, and Sonny Hall, all seniors; drum ensemble—seniors Keith Huston, Danny Paul, Jay Cummings, and Mark Rusk; low voice—Kathy Phipps and Suzanne Mormance, seniors. Belles also attained a first place standing.

CLUB SURVIVORS

With the acquisition of jobs and the development of distinctive outside interests, Northwest students found little, if any, time for participation in school-sponsored academic clubs. Many students' class assignments ended after eighth period and they displayed no desire to wait until after ninth period to attend club meetings. Consequently, the majority of these clubs' memberships were significantly decreased, some to the point of the complete disintegration of the club.

In as short a time as three years, six academic clubs including the history, science, and business activities clubs dissolved due to insufficient time and interest. Yet a few academic clubs continued to have regular meetings with fairly stable memberships. Members of Future Teachers of America learned the many facets of the teaching profession through films and guest speakers. A computer math club for students who were interested in operating the math department's computer terminal was also available. The chess club, which was composed of students who enjoyed playing and improving their game, also met occasionally. Among this club's activities was experimentation with three-dimensional chess.

Officers of the Northwest Thespian troupe believed that the lack of interest, especially for underclassmen, was a result of limited knowledge of the clubs that actually existed at Northwest. Thespians, therefore, initiated a "Get Involved" plan in which they talked with the officers of other clubs and learned about their different projects. A list of these clubs and summaries of their activities was then compiled and included in the Northwest High School Student Handbook. Thespians hoped that this plan would help to remedy the situation of growing disinterest among students.

(c) The combined forces of the foreign language clubs made their annual Christmas party an international event.

(d) The Red Cross Club collected toys and candy to fill Christmas stockings for underprivileged children.

ARE FEW IN THE INTEREST WAR

RELATIONS

Opposite—Black and white, young and old, boy and girl, teacher and student, man and nature, man and God—merged inside and out of Northwest. The interrelationship of these extremes always generated the entire range of human emotions: love, anger, confusion, frustration, despair as a result, Northwest students learned from their associations.

The people on the bus go up & down

"Desegregation shall not mean the assignment of students to public schools in order to overcome racial imbalance." Many parents and concerned residents felt that the action taken by the Indianapolis Public School System in assigning white students from Northwest High School feeder schools to Crispus Attucks High School contradicted the Civil Rights Act of the 1964 clause stated above. Despite heavy resistance, the formerly black-dominated Attucks was integrated with the aim of achieving 60 per cent white while Northwest enrollment dropped 15 per cent.

Attucks was built in Indianapolis in 1927 by a Ku Klux Klan dominated school board to segregate blacks from whites. For this segregation, assignment of schools was necessary and blacks had no choice but to send their children to Attucks.

Students were again assigned to certain schools outside of their normal districts in September 1971. To avoid the shift in assignments, families had the choice of moving to another school district, enrolling in private schools or not attending school at all. Attendance records at Attucks revealed that there were at least 400 absences daily during the first month of school as a result of rebellious parents refusing to send their children to school.

Supporters of the integration plan felt it could have easily worked if it had been backed by all the parents, and perhaps interpreted the actions of anti-busing parents as being prejudiced. Those who adhered to the principle of forced desegregation stressed the idea of brotherhood to prevent situations similar to these from arising in future years.

According to respected psychologists, young adults would gain respect for members of other races if they went through the learning process with them. Whites would learn that not all blacks are hostile and blacks would realize that they are not inferior in the minds of their white classmates. Most importantly, students would whole-heartedly believe that everyone is equal. This may have been the ultimate goal, but NHS parents such as Mrs. Marguerite A. Brown disagreed with the methods used to unite blacks and whites in the Northwest area. "... busing of white children will not undo the injustice done to the blacks. Two wrongs do not make a right." She stressed that parents paid increased taxes to build schools in the immediate area for their children. Mrs. Brown added that several did so without any complications.

Transporting students from Northwest to Attucks was an effort to promote brotherly relations between blacks and whites but due to opposition, the situation became a tense confrontation between parents and the school system.

The student council led almost all activities promoting school spirit: (a) Jim Dimitroff and Laura Munn, seniors, and Jerry Francis, junior, make signs for the cafeteria with a personal footprint. Using the new sign-making machine, (b) Terry McKusky, sophomore, selects stencils for a project, and (c) Donna Cullins, junior, adjusts a stairway sign boosting the wrestlers. (d) At the pep assembly climaxed a pre-sectional school spirit week, seniors Tonja McKusky and Susie Elcessor lead students in impromptu cheers. Another activity of school spirit week was the sale of gum during lunch periods by council representative, like Russel Calvin (e).

STUDENT COUNCIL INVESTS IN school spirit

The purpose of Northwest's Student Council was to promote better student-faculty understanding, and to represent the ideas and opinions of the entire student body.

Sponsoring and engineering Homecoming and the Little 500 were among Student Council's major activities. A large portion of the Council's funds were spent on a $500 sign-making machine complete with the necessary paper and multi-colored inks. The school spirit committee designed and posted signs made with this machine encouraging various Northwest clubs and teams on to victory or success. Occasionally, the Council planned after-game dances complete with live bands including "Leghorn," a city-wide known group.

Student Council also voiced girls' wishes to wear slacks to school and suggest student lounges and the enclosure of the mall. Miss Diane Hibbeln, dean of girls, considered the suggestions and either rejected them or presented them to school administrators.

A student Council function that involved every Pioneer was the election of representatives and officers. Each homeroom selected one Council member and an alternate. Only those freshmen having third period study halls were eligible for Council membership while all sophomores, juniors, and seniors were allowed to run. The candidates prepared and delivered campaign speeches that included statements of their qualifications and reasons for wanting to join Student Council.

Officers John Case, president; Russel Calvin, vice-president; Carmelita Kosh, secretary; Loreena Sandlin, treasurer; Tonja McKusky, historian, were elected at the end of the school year by a popular, all-school vote. Preparing the minutes of council meetings for the homeroom representatives to read to their rooms was part of the cabinet's responsibilities. The representatives discussed Council functions with the class and offered their suggestions to the Council. A suggestion box, located in the school library, was also available.

The success of Student Council was largely dependent upon the basic principal of give and take. Council's duty was to fully represent the student body; in turn, the student body's obligation was to provide members with something worthwhile to represent.

(a) Sitting on the floor added to the relaxed atmosphere of the "Up With People" concert.

(b) Male eyes were glued to the Japanese singer in "Up With People" as a lead singer goes relatively unnoticed.

"EVERYBODY SING ALONG"

Excitement and eager anticipation vibrated the packed gymnasium February 16 as students enjoyed the "Up With People" concert presented at Northwest High School.

The purpose of "Up With People," a cast of high school and college age students of varying backgrounds and nationalities, was to journey through different countries around the world conveying their message of faith in mankind. Numerous families offered the young people their homes and hospitality during their week-long stay in Indianapolis. Contributions from local businessmen made this concert possible.

"Up With People" received a warm response from Northwest students who clapped, stomped, and sang along with the performers without hesitation. The spokesman for the group was greeted with deafening applause and boisterous cheers as he urged the students to "do whatever they felt like doing." Perhaps this display of simple trust and understanding was the key to the overwhelming success of the concert.

(c) The influence of the "Up With People" concert encouraged Mark Brown, senior, to get involved.

(d) Students, and teachers are caught up by the sound of one of the lead singers of the "Up With People".

"PEACE ON

Tinsel, gaily-wrapped packages, lighted Christmas trees, and mistletoe were all part of Northwest High School students' annual Christmas preparations. Caught up by the spirit of the season, the Student Council furnished and decorated an evergreen for the main lobby and dotted the halls with a variety of signs that conveyed messages of holiday cheer. Presenting an assortment of traditional carols as a gift to the students, faculty, and surrounding community, a number of Northwest musical groups also contributed to the festive atmosphere.

EARTH, Good Will To MEN"

For some students, this season was simply a time for warm greetings, gift-giving, and general feelings of good will; but others related deeper, sometimes spiritual meanings to the yearly observance of Christmas. Senior Allen King, who celebrated Christmas as the coming of Christ, explained the reasons for his faith in God. "I believe in God because He showed me He is real. I feel His love all the day and night." Delores Davis, sophomore, expressed a similar conception of an almighty being. "To know there is God you have to be aware of the things around you and trust the things that are happening and learn not to underestimate them." Delores continued saying that she felt God held the powers of destruction and eternity. Supporting his acceptance of a divine creation, junior Dave Burks added, "Blind chance could not have produced living things. An intelligent force caused things to exist."

Although Christmas took on numerous meanings for different people, the holiday season was a time when the majority of students felt a kinship with others as they shared the hope that "peace on earth, good will towards men" might someday become reality.

Senior Vicki Marchetti makes a last minute adjustment to perfect the student body's Christmas tree.

(a) Student Council School Spirit Committee posted this sign commemorating the birth of Jesus.

(c) Memories of the lighted Circle in downtown Indianapolis remained with many students long after the holidays had passed.

(b) Deciding at last upon a "sweetheart" ring is Frank Taylor, senior.

(c) "Don't you think this one will do?" asks freshman Brion McKinley of freshmen Karen Wing and Sandy Smith.

(d) Juniors Chris Black and Connie Denton and sophomore Johnny Plummer and junior Debbie Winiger meet together for a day at Lafayette Square.

AND GIRLS TOGETHER...

"Jane said that John said he was going to ask you to the show, but he has to wait until he can break up with Mary because she doesn't know and he wants to break it to her, but he told me to tell you that he really digs you."

It could not be called romance, yet it was probably more serious than grade school "puppy love." Dating in high school was the beginning of newly-meaningful relationships between boy and girl. The conditions for these relationships were ripe at high school age; teens assumed the responsibilities of driving and working, thus, problems of transportation and money that students encountered in earlier years were alleviated; and teens achieved the maturity necessary to relate intelligently to one another.

Junior high activities that did not require extensive transportation or money supplied the foundation for high school dating. "I went to after school dances and parties in junior high," commented Jerry Chapman, junior, "but you can't really date until you have a driver's license and a car." After entering high school, most freshmen and sophomores looked to the social security of group dating to provide a transition to going out in pairs. Sophomore Karon Lawrence believed, "You can have a better time when there's a whole group of kids. You don't have to be the one to start a conversation."

Driver's licenses and car keys in hand, Northwest students advanced to double and single dating. With acceptable transportation, the variety of places to go increased. Most students chose movies, sports events, and miniature golf as their favorite dates, as well as seasonal activities like picnicking, bicycling, and swimming in summer and sledding and ice skating in winter.

Sitting at home watching television or just being together was an all-seasonal activity that most enjoyed. "I like to go on casual dates where a couple can just be together in their natural relaxed selves," Jeff Riggs, sophomore, said.

Whether or not to date steadily posed an interesting question for upperclass Pioneers. Most agreed that dating several people was important not only in finding the right person, but also in enjoying different people's company. Supporting this idea, senior Susan Pearson felt, "Dating a variety of people is a lot of fun because it always creates new circumstances and problems." Estimates of how many people Northwest students dated ranged from one to 1,000, but Kevin Boyd, junior, dated "enough to know what type of girl I like."

Finding the right person was important for boys and girls; symbols of a lasting relationship, exchanged rings, matching shirts and blouses, sometimes "sweetheart" or "first promise" rings adorned many couples. Reasons for steady dating varied. "I think when you enjoy someone's company a lot and get along well it's good to date steady," stated Evelyn Jones, junior. Some felt that in order to explore each other's personalities, steady dating was the best method. "Steady dating is better," commented Susie Muir, sophomore, "because it gives you a chance to really get to know one particular guy and find out if he is really right for you." Dutch dating, sharing the expenses of an evening out, was a practice both boys and girls thought should be reserved for firmly established relationships. "Dutch dating is nice if you are dating a guy steadily; it is not fair for him to have to pay all the time," said Tonjo McKuskey, senior. However, some objected to it no matter what the circumstances were. Freshman Rita Moore decided, "Dutch dating doesn't appeal to me because you lose your femininity."

A MAN & A

In the spring of 1971, Northwest High School sponsored two annual dances that enabled the students to express their relationships formally. Months of making ready involving traditional preparations bordering on resemblance to rituals preceeded the events. Buying or making a formal, renting a tux, saving money weeks in advance to cover expenses all added to the building excitement of the dance. The actual occasion was usually followed by dinner at one of Indianapolis' formal restaurants and, in the case of the prom, a picnic the next day.

In the school cafeteria, on April 27, students in ROTC attended the Military Ball with its theme of "Somewhere My Love" as related musically by the Steve Belmar Band. Officers, cadets and their dates danced in the surroundings of flowers, posters and floating candles. ROTC student sponsor Cheryl O'Riley was crowned queen of the event.

The junior and senior proms were combined amid controversy which climaxed with the vote of the junior and senior classes in favor of the unified effort. In past years, the junior prom took place in the cafeteria while the senior prom occurred in a formal ball room. The idea of a combined prom was initiated by students who considered the expense of two proms prohibitive.

WOMAN EMERGE FORMALLY

The Prom Committee chose the Egyptian Room of the Murat Temple for the Junior-Senior Prom on June 4. Chosen by couples who attended the event, Mike Kirkman and Mary Vann, 71, reigned as king and queen. A tiered fountain standing eight feet high dominated the ballroom as the George Nicholoff Orchestra played the theme song "We've Only Just Begun," and along with others for the dancers.

OLD HEATON!

On a crisp January morning, two senior boys snuck stealthily to a car situated in the school parking lot. Their plan? To unleash a "greased" pig in the cafeteria during the fourth hour lunch period. The "lookout" glanced nervously around as the crate containing the pig was unloaded and addressed his companion. "I wonder where old Heaton is?" he asked. Little did the conspirators realize that Mr. Paul Heaton, dean of boys was cleverly concealed between two cars only a few yards away and had observed the entire proceedings. Just as the two were nearing the school's entrance, Mr. Heaton revealed himself to the culprits and declared, "Here's 'old Heaton'." The boys made an abrupt about-face and returned the pig safely to the trunk of the car.

This minor incident, humorous as it was, illustrated the need for strict enforcement of rules and regulations to maintain order at Northwest High School. "The rules that may seem severe to some were created to benefit the students and the school," said Mr. Heaton. "They are all a part of the impression that Northwest gives to others."

At the beginning of the school year, each new student and all incoming freshmen were issued the Northwest High School Student Handbook consisting of the basic rules and policies that students were required to follow. Outlined in this booklet were guidelines concerning attendance, hall passes, health services, program scheduling, lockers, the bookstore, the library, protection of school property, and standard rules of courtesy.

In the event that a student willfully disobeyed school ordinances, he was sent to either of the two deans, Miss Diane Hibbeln or Mr. Paul Heaton, who were responsible for essentially all disciplinary measures. "We work together," commented Miss Hibbeln. "I take the girls and Mr. Heaton takes the boys." Problems that were most often brought to the deans' attention included tardiness, truancy, questions about dress, and general disorderly conduct.

Conferences, which usually involved a 40 minute period after school; suspension; or, in some cases, expulsion were punishments commonly administered to those in violation of the rules. Statistics showed that the record number of summons' to the dean's office was held by a junior girl with a total of 66, while the boy's record was acquired by a senior with 31 call slips.

Only one case of vandalism was reported at Northwest. The incident, which occurred in the fall, involved the setting of Mr. Heaton's office of fire. However, through much investigation, the responsible parties were finally apprehended and charged with arson. In spite of this unfortunate mishap, Mr. Heaton was well pleased with Northwest's overall record and appearance. "While it has been necessary for most every school in Indianapolis to be painted, this one has never had to," he claimed. "I really mean this . . . I'm proud of these kids."

RULES AND REGULATIONS

"Students' rights is an extremely vague and confusing area of the law. Students are somewhat like aliens in society: they have been granted a few rights, but they are not considered citizens and have little power to affect the institutions that govern them. Since there is no constitutional law on student rights, there are as many different sets of rules about student behavior as there are principals."

—from Up Against the Law by Jean Strouse.

Students rights were at times, a difficult concept for many Northwest High School students to grasp. As principal of the high school, it was Mr. Kenneth Smartz's duty to uphold the disciplinary policy organized by the Indianapolis Public School system. This policy was designed to provide an environment of good order for students so they might achieve the primary goal of education.

Each student was obligated to respect established authority, which included adherence to school rules and regulations as well as community, state, and national laws. The ultimate decisions of which rules applied to Northwest were left up to Mr. Smartz. These basic rules, outlined in the Northwest High School Student Handbook, were created to "preserve the rights of individuals and for living harmoniously together," but, occasionally, students did object to certain restrictions.

The deans disagreed on what they felt the most protested rules were. Miss Diane Hibbeln, dean of girls, believed tardiness to be the most violated rule. "Everyday there are large numbers of students lined up in the attendance office waiting to receive admittance slips," she explained. "Tardiness is a difficult rule to enforce because of the numerous excuses for lateness; however, the only acceptable excuses are late buses and illness." Mr. Paul Heaton, dean of boys, believed that students most often disobeyed the regulation concerning smoking on school property. "I don't think this is due so much to the habit of smoking as it is a challenge of the rules." Directly related to this issue was the question if a law prohibiting smoking actually existed. (see story at right). Students also disputed some rules concerning the dress code and attendance. According to Mr. Heaton, Northwest had no written dress code. "No overalls, no muscle shirts, shirttails tucked in, and the boys must wear socks are my only requests," he said. Miss Hibbeln reported that the only basis for enforcing the dress code was "discretion of the deans and parents. The state outlined guidelines for attendance rules and the deans strictly complied with these."

Inevitably as long as rules and regulations exist, there will be protests. Always seeking smooth function of the school, the administration will maintain an organized system of law and order.

"GOT A LIGHT?"

"Smoking is legally impossible on school grounds because there is a state law which prohibits any smoking on school property." This quotation from Vice Principal George Gale was in direct contrast to the word of the State Fire Marshall's Board which stated, "There is no state or city ordinance pertaining to the subject of students smoking in schools. This matter is left entirely up to the superintendent or the principal of the school."

Who were students to believe?

Some Marion County schools experimented with smoking lounges to observe the effects they had on students. Discipline problems increased immensely and most of these schools abolished the lounges due to the debris and safety hazards that resulted. Superintendent of Schools Stanley Campbell approved one such experiment at Carmel High School. In addition to the difficulties mentioned above, Carmel encountered complications in relation to the Anti-Cigarette Law which denied minors the right to purchase cigarettes.

Despite the conflicting views of Mr. Gale and the fire board, prohibition of smoking in Northwest remained.

STAY AWAY!

"What do we need cops for? This isn't a jail, it's a school." This was the reaction of a great many Northwest students when they discovered that security guards had been placed in their school.

Captain John Quatman of the security division of the Indianapolis School Board explained that security guards were not stationed at schools to police students, but rather to protect them. Every school in Indianapolis was required to have at least two security guards; placement of additional guards was dependent upon the students' general attitudes and behavior. In some schools throughout the city, it was also necessary to have policewomen especially for the girls. "Northwest has not yet come to that and I doubt if it ever will," stated Paul Heaton, dean of boys. "In my opinion, Sergeant Jones and Officer Taylor do an excellent job and are a great help in controlling disturbances. They achieved their primary purpose of keeping outsiders from entering the building and protecting the students as well as the facilities," he explained. "They also attained their secondary goal of maintaining order within the building itself."

As a security guard at Northwest, Sergeant John Jones expressed how he felt. "I don't like acting as a police officer over Northwest students, but I do like working with them and attempting to communicate with the students," he said. "I consider them all my children when I come into this building. I may have to raise some cane with them once in awhile," he continued, "but no one from the outside will be permitted to cause trouble as long as I'm here."

Officer Robert Taylor, IPS security guard, revealed similar thoughts about the students and atmosphere at Northwest. "I look to examine the students' opinions on life and look back to compare our values. I feel I can relate their views with mine and I have really learned from the students." Officer Taylor added that Northwest had fewer problems with school disturbances than any other school. "I think the students want it this way," he explained.

the floor each evening. For each lunch period, two or three students were hired for $2.68 a week to stack trays.

After establishing just how much food was prepared each day in the cafeteria, it was understandable why between $4,400 and $5,000 was spent monthly on food supplies. The cafeteria was operated on a totally non-profit basis. In 1971, the government organized a plate lunch program for students in need of financial aid. Students were given the opportunity to purchase meal tickets for $2.25. A choice of two set meals was then provided each day for a week. The government also continued the special student milk rate which was five and a half cents. For convenience, five cents was charged the first semester and six cents the next. Because of President Richard Nixon's wage-price freeze that lasted until November, cafeteria food prices were temporarily prevented from rising.

Students often wondered why the purchase of iced tea was restricted to members of the faculty. Lack of the proper ice facilities to serve 2,339 students kept tea from the students.

The cafeteria also provided students with an ideal place for playing pranks on each other. Tripping freshmen as they made their way to the lunch lines or slipping a spoon or knife into an unsuspecting classmate's pocket were stunts that frequently occurred. For a price, students purposely tripped with their lunch trays in hand; their efforts were always greeted with uproarious applause.

The prank of the year was students returning their trays to clean-up all at the same time.

"We try to prepare a wide variety of foods," said Mrs. Roberta Smith, head dietitian. "But if Mr. Smartz had his way, we would serve chili every day." Of the various foods offered in the cafeteria, chili, hamburgers, and hot dogs rated high in popularity. When hamburgers were included on the menu, students consumed 2,218 of them. On days when fish and chips were served, 522 pounds of french fries were prepared. Cooks baked an average of 125 pies daily and proudly claimed that there were usually none left at the end of the day.

Since school was converted to a nine period day, lunch was served only during periods four through seven. "This made it harder on the cafeteria staff," explained Mrs. Smith. "Lunch lines were longer and there was less time for counters to be set up."

Cafeteria personnel consisted of 34 cooks, a custodian who emptied trash, and a student employed to mop

Sports spectacles are relaxing...

The Northwest school calendar was dotted with dates on which large numbers of students congregated in the stadium or the gym for an athletic event. Aside from the game itself, other aspects of these activities were important to the high school community. As a part of the social life, they provided students with a chance to escape the pressures of school. Two of the occasions, Homecoming and Little 500, featured the selection of a queen and a court, a custom in high school for many decades. The school also benefited by retaining the gate receipts.

How important football or basketball games were socially depended a great deal on attendance, which, some felt depended on how well the teams were doing.

In recent years, attendance at football games was fairly poor; during the 1971 season, in which the team gained a 2-8 record, many of the stadium benches were empty. Basketball, however, was a different story. With winning seasons and back-to-back sectional titles, the basketball team attracted near-capacity crowds for all home games. Evidence of the varsity squad's drawing power was seen at the Attucks game, when the stands were filled and spectators stood at courtside to watch the action, and the Ritter game, which was changed from the Ritter gym to the Northwest gym to accommodate the crowd.

After certain games, the school sponsored dances in the cafeteria for Northwest students. Admission varied according to whether there was live or recorded music as did the attendance. The first indoor dance of 1971 was after the basketball game with Manual, with live music by Stonewall, a Northwest band; the dance, though it did not reap overwhelming profits, was successful.

ful by providing an activity for students. However, the number of dances sponsored declined each year as disturbances with students from other schools increased.

Two well-attended events, the Homecoming football game in the fall and the Little 500 in May, marked special occasions for Northwest students. Weeks in advance, the Student Council built up interest through posters and homeroom announcements done by the School Spirit Committee. The Future Teachers of America club sponsored a contest between homerooms for Homecoming which involved displays outside of each homeroom to promote school spirit. Ribbons were awarded to the best displays from each class. During the week preceding Homecoming and Little 500, students nominated candidates for queen. The senior class chose six senior girls as Homecoming queen candidates; for Little 500, each class selected the nominees from their own classes. Both queens were voted on the day of the event; during halftime at Homecoming and between races at Little 500, the winner was announced and toured the cinder track in front of the stadium. The 1971 Little 500 queen Mary Huber, '71, and her court Alison Kemery, senior; Amelia Potenza and Terry Switzer, juniors; and Pam Dalton and Gail Hinderliter, sophomores, rode in official Indianapolis 500 pace cars donated for the occasion by local car dealers. Corvettes loaned by the Indianapolis Corvette Club carried 1971 Homecoming queen Sue Pearson and the other candidates—Sandra Conner, Lauretta Cork, Pat Scudder, Sandy Smith, and Debbie Waldron. (continued)

Looking at these events from a business angle, the profits from home football and basketball games made the school's role worthwhile. According to George Gale, vice-principal in charge of building and finances, the cost of these games was as low as $7.00, which paid for the printing of tickets, done in the printing classes. At 75 cents for advance tickets and $1.25 for gate admission, the school was apt to make a great deal, though attendance was again a factor. The concession stands at the south end of the gym and the new stadium concession stand were managed by the Northwest Parent-Teachers Association, with all profits going to their projects. Game programs for football and basketball games were produced by the Northwest Booster Club and sold for 15 cents. Besides including team pictures, the programs had advertisements from local businesses which helped pay for printing costs.

Little 500 was also a money-making project. Mr. Gale attributed good weather as the reason for high attendance and the activity's success. Ticket sales plus an entrance fee from bicycle and tricycle teams helped overcome the cost. Approximately $700 to $800 was spent in preparation for the Little 500. Renting tricycles, smoothing the track, building a scoring table, buying shirts for the teams, and buying flowers and gifts for the queen candidates had to be considered, but despite the high overhead, the school came out ahead.

Homecoming was probably the only school-sponsored event ending up in the red. The main problem concerned the traditional Homecoming mums which were purchased by the school for resale to students. Too much was invested in mums to be recovered from the football crowd according to Mr. Gale. The loss, however, was not so great to warrant discounting the festivities.

"It shall be unlawful for the pupils in any of the elementary or high schools in this state to form secret societies, fraternities, or other similar organizations in such schools."

Vice-Principal George Gale explained the reason for this state law which was first enacted in 1907. "Organizations which consist of students under college age cannot be recognized legally by the school because they do not permit everyone to join," he said. The law further provided that students would be subject to suspension or, if necessary, expulsion if they failed to comply with these rules. The fact remained, however, that social clubs did exist in many Indianapolis schools.

DD's Delts, Jadettes, and Black Soul Sisters, all girl's clubs; and two boys' clubs, Barons and Puds existed at Northwest. Members of these clubs consisted of only approximately 12 per cent of the student body. All of the clubs met on Tuesday nights except the Black Soul Sisters, who had their meetings on Wednesday nights. Meeting places of the individual clubs rotated each week to different members' homes. Elections of new officers including president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, sergeant-at-arms, and historian occurred every semester. Each club had a written constitution establishing rules all members were required to follow. Members of these clubs were also expected to pay weekly dues of 25 cents which was generally used for parties or dances.

Two of the longer-established clubs' DD's and Delts, had 50 members. Barons had a membership of only 20 due to the fact that many of their members graduated in the class of '71. Organized in the year, Puds also had 20 members. Membership of 23 and Black Soul Sisters, the '71 had 14 members: Melo-Debs and were clubs that existed in the past at Northwest as a result of insufficient memberships.

Though there was no evidence that the boys served any useful purpose, some of the clubs did complete some constructive projects. For Christmas, DD's collected articles, such as rollers, hairpins, and hairnets, and presented them to girls at Girls' School; Jadettes sent gifts to servicemen overseas. DD's also sponsored an Easter egg hunt and party for underprivileged children at the Christamore House while Jadettes made Easter baskets for a nearby nursing home.

Social clubs primarily existed, however, for the social activities involved. Profits from money-raising projects, such as car washes or candy sales, were almost always used to finance dances, hayrides, or rush activities.

Rush consisted of a series of slumber parties, teas, and initiations in which the new members or rushees were expected to participate before being officially voted in. With the exception of Puds who had no initiation, all the clubs planned and carried out rush activities once a semester.

Girls being initiated into clubs were usually required to braid their hair in tiny braids all over their heads or to wear pony tails, unmatched clothes, and anklet socks for a week. Some were also expected to collect 500 in a certain period of time and to distribute gum upon demand. Members of the club performed such tasks as purposely tripping friends or skipping class. Some clubs required candidates to wear mismatched clothes, wear socks, or perform other tasks, the boys were required to climb up in the halls, knock students' books from their desks, and carry their classmates' lunch trays for them.

When a rushee completed initiation to the satisfaction of the other clubmembers, it was then decided whether or not he should become an active member. If he was accepted, he was permitted to participate in all that club's activities. Members of some social clubs possessed symbols of distinction such as T-shirts imprinted with their club names or emblems or having all their members wear a certain outfit.

It has been established that there were both positive and negative sides to social clubs. Whether students' reasons for joining the clubs were prestige, security, the close association between friends, climbing the social ladder, or simply that "there was nothing else to do," there were definitely conflicting viewpoints concerning their value for the individuals involved and the effects they had on those not included.

Yet 12 percent of the student body ignored parents' administration, as well as state statutes, which banned social clubs because the clubs' activities excluded the remaining 88 per cent of Northwest students.

Confused, disgusted, or harrassed by the surrounding pressures of school and work, Northwest students often escaped into another world of a book, a movie, or a television show and lost themselves completely in fantasy or philosophy.

Money often limited what students read—newly published books, usually unavailable at libraries because of long waiting lists, were read several months to a year after publication when they were printed in paperbacks. Nevertheless, Northwest students enjoyed a wide variety of literature; that individuality reigned was evident in that no one book could be labeled "most popular book of 1971-1972." There was a general trend towards non-fiction, which might indicate youth's stability or search for reality. Some of the more prominent books, Future Shock by Alvin Toffler, a look into the effects of society's rapid change; The Greening of America by Charles Reick, about, as it is subtitled, "how the youth revolution is trying to make America livable;" The Female Eunuch by Germaine Greer, which relates the development to a woman's role to today's society; Ever- rything You Always Wanted To Know About Sex by Dr. David Reuben, a handbook on sex in question and answer format; Hard Times by Studs Terkle, which chronicled with personal interviews the Depression; and Kent State: What Happened and Why by James Michener, a novelist-reporter's account of the May, 1970, Kent State University demonstrations that ended in the death of four students, reflected interest in society and youth's role in it. The scope of fiction popularity ranged from J.R.R. Tolkien's fantasies The Hobbit and the Lord of the Rings trilogy to the existentialist Crime and Punishment by Fiador Dostoyevsky, read by the modern literature class. Students enjoyed more contemporary works like The Godfather by Mario Puzo, Love Story by Erich Segal, Going All the Way by Dan Wakefield as well as required reading for certain English courses, A Separate Peace by John Knowles, Tess of the D'Urbervilles by Thomas Hardy, Lord of the Flies by William Golding, and The Scarlet Letter by Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Regular publications, following the recent trends of specializing and catering to individual tastes, enjoyed patronage by students. Mad and National Lampoon competed as satire reviews; with advertising and articles directed towards college and young businessmen, Esquire and Playboy caught the attention of students, male and female; sports fans generally turned to Sports Illustrated and The Sporting News; fashion magazines like Seventeen, Vogue, and Glamour and liberated Cosmopolitan were read by Northwest girls; for the socially conscious, journals reminiscent of the muckraking 1900's were Consumer Reports and Ramparts; Rolling Stone shook off its underground image to emerge as an important critique of music and the music society; and perennial favorites of male students of Northwest were the countless different car, hot rod, and motorcycle magazines. With the folding of the long-established variety magazine, Look, in November, 1971, the transition of magazines to suit specialized tastes was nearly complete.

Cartoonists captured the fancy of Northwest students as they also experienced a period of transition. In the daily comic strips, "Peanuts" by Charles Schulz and "Tumbleweeds" by T. K. Ryan were not only valid social and philosophical comment, but also among the favorites of students. Comic Books, from True Romance to Green Lantern enjoyed a revival. New cartoonists, imitating the style of animated films of the 1930's, contributed to the underground press; Robert Crumb, Gilbert Shelton, Ken Greene, and others created cartoon characters in such counter-culture comic books as Zap, Mr. Natural, Tooney Loons, and Noof Unnies.

it is today

The motion picture rating system kept students under 18 from attending movies with R (Under 18 requires accompanying parent, guardian, or spouse) or X (Under 18 not admitted) ratings, limiting them to those rated G (All ages admitted) or GP (All ages admitted—parental discretion advised). Most Northwest students selected Billy Jack as the year's best. Starring relatively unknown Tom Laughlin, the story revolved around a half breed veteran of Vietnam who has dropped out of society to study ancient Indian lore and protect kids at Interracial Freedom School from uptight citizens. Students also mentioned as movies important to them: Two-Lane Blacktop, starring Warren Oates and singer James Taylor; Academy Award-winning actor George C. Scott's Patton, a film biography of Army General George Patton; futuristic science-fiction thriller Andromeda Strain; Summer of '42, a story of young, inexperienced love; Little Big Man, with Dustin Hoffman as the only living white survivor of the Battle of Little Big Horn; and classics Gone With the Wind and Dr. Zhivago, re-released to capture new audiences.

The medium that stole moviegoers from the theatre, television, filled many hours of students' lives. There was little question on which program was most popular; Emmy-Award winner All in the Family (CBS), with Carroll O'Connor, Jean Stapleton, Bob Reiner, and Sally Struthers, shocked and amused people with its frankness and subject matter. Archie Bunker, played by O'Connor, became the hero or the enemy for viewers with his middle-class, conservative, sometimes prejudiced opinions. Outspoken announcers Howard Cossel and Don Meredith on Monday Night Football (ABC) entertained Northwest football fans with their between-play banter. Laugh-In (NBC), and hour of fast-paced comedy skits and black-outs hosted by Dan Rowan and Dick Martin, was toppled from its pinnacle of popularity by All in the Family and newer shows. Other shows, Nichols (NBC), with James Gardner as a motorcycle-riding sheriff of a western town at the turn of the century; Mike Connors and Gail Fisher in Mannix (CBS), about a private detective; comedian Flip Wilson's The Flip Wilson Show (NBC); Sesame Street (PBS), a show directed to preschool youth, but with appeal to all ages; Great American Dream Machine (PBS), a highly acclaimed television newsmagazine; Mary Tyler Moore, as a young, unmarried assistant producer of a news program in the Mary Tyler Moore Show; and Room 222 with Lloyd Haines as a high school teacher with special insight into his students' problems, all figured prominently in Northwest students' television schedules.

Whether graphic, cinematic, or electronic, escape routes from reality offered by 1971-1972 media were gladly taken by frazzled Northwest students.

What were the alternatives when the pressure built up inside Northwest students, when no amount of diversions or recreations could solve the frustrating experiences of living in the middle of childhood and adulthood? To escape the pressure, many students ultimately walked down several avenues of release, each on a different level of gravity.

An impending test or class presentation sent many students to the nurse's office with dizzy spells or an upset stomach. Mrs. Lillian Resnick, the school nurse saw 50 to 75 students daily in her first floor office. Although some were imposters, most that visited the nurse were ill. When a student entered the office, Mrs. Resnick tried first to ascertain what was wrong. If the illness involved fatigue, headache, or other minor maladies, the student would rest on a cot; should the sickness be of a more serious nature, Mrs. Resnick contacted the student's parent's if he was to be sent home. With regulations defining a school nurse's role, Mrs. Resnick was permitted to administer "reasonable first aid." Any dispensing of medication without perscription was illegal.

Excuses for going to the nurse's office ranged from humorous to grim. Mrs. Resnick recalled a most unusual reason from a boy who suffered from acute itching. Investigation revealed that the boy's mother had washed his underwear with fiberglass curtains, leaving irritants in the cloth. The most serious accidents she had dealt with involved bone fractures, though there were few. Occasionally a student sought the nurse's aid after taking a drug that they could not cope with. However, Mrs. Resnick felt that the nurse's office was the last place a person with a drug problem would have gone.

Awareness of drug use on the high school level was underscored by the schedule of guidance counselor Dr. Gilbert Shuck; while most faculty members' ninth period involved preparatory periods of teaching freshman or sophomore classes, Dr. Shuck's schedule read "Narcotics—Room 176." His duties entailed educating Northwest of the modern problems of drug use. In February and March, Drug Scene: Indianapolis, a free exhibit at the Indianapolis Children's Museum, illustrated the violence of drug abuse with 19 photomurals, each explaining one of last year's city deaths attributed to a drug overdose.

The range of dangerous drugs some students turned to included alcohol and mentally—and physically—altering drugs; reasons for their use ranged from social acceptance to physical need. Discovering the actual number of drug users in the Northwest student body was an impossible task; most kept their habits concealed, and many non-users felt that social status would increase with tales of experiments with alcohol or marijuana.

Escape from class... escape from life.

pressures of school work and outside jobs were cited as causes for use of uppers and downers, pills to increase alertness or induce sleep; with habitual use, their convenience often became dependence. Hallucinatory drugs and alcohol were more socially-oriented drugs; informal get-togethers sometimes became beer or pot parties, even with the great risk of being raided.

Legal or not, drug use continued for many students. To combat it, Dr. Shuck attempted to form a committee of students to discuss and offer alternatives to drug use. He felt that students could better fight drug abuse at Northwest than adults.

Legal drinking was within arm's reach for Pioneers over 18 years old when the state legislature passed a bill permitting the sale of alcoholic beverages to all men and women 18 or older. As the bill waited for Governor Edgar Whitcomb's approval or veto, opinions poured in to his office; at first, letters ran heavily against the measure, but later support came from college towns. The late support failed to convince Whitcomb, as he vetoed the bill, claiming it was "not in the best interest of the people." The legislature upheld the veto, leaving 18-to-20 year olds with partial adult rights.

Two signs of a dropout: a clearance card, the clerical work that makes him a statistic; and a lonely figure outside Northwest, thinking of opportunities lost.

Drop in on Mrs. West, or maybe drop out.

Helping students over emotional problems was the job of Northwest social worker Sarah West. In her office three afternoons a week, Mrs. West talked to students about their experiences with or desires of running away from home, pregnancy, absence from school. With help from the deans and teachers, Mrs. West was able to confer with six to ten students daily, the majority of them girls.

Students were usually referred to the social worker by a teacher or counselor, but many came in of their own accord. Talks with Mrs. West lasted around 20 minutes; if there was a need for deeper investigation into the student's background and thoughts, another appointment was arranged. At first, most were apprehensive, but Mrs. West's manner put them at ease; by listening, an act many youth thought adults could not perform, she overcame their misgivings and delved into the root of their problem.

Lack of the type of personal attention that Mrs. West gave the Northwest students influenced some to make the final escape from high school—dropping out. Northwest's annual dropout rate reached 13 per cent in 1971; although a comparatively low figure, it still denotes a failure somewhere. Reasons for dropping out sometimes reflected a student's attitude towards school; with such words as "regimented administration," "giant social club," or "irrelevant," dropouts expressed their displeasure with high school. Almost as often, difficulties at home caused students to leave school. One Northwest girl dropped out, saw her error and returned to night school, but dropped out again because of "conflicts at home." In his book, The Dropout: Causes and Cures, Lucius F. Cervantes stated: "The dropout is reared in a family of less solidarity, less primary relatedness, and less personal influence than is the family in which the graduate is reared."

Perhaps the saddest excuse given for withdrawal was simply "age 16," meaning that the student has reached the age when he can legally leave school, and he has done so.

Through individual efforts of the faculty, a potential dropout was recognizable early and was given special attention. In an endeavor to realize the discovery of such students, the Indianapolis Public Schools increased their facilities with guidance, and psychological and social services, such as the social worker.

Senior Vance Stratton is the only Northwest griddier to receive honorable mention on both the In-diana and football.

The third annual Little 500, Northwest's version of "the greatest spectacle in racing," was again a dramatic event. The May 14, 1971, race saw Team 18 (Rick Giltner, Dave Graber, Carl May, and Mike Tillery, '71; and Randy McKinley, senior) triumph over 26 other bicycle teams. Tillery (d) took the checkered flag from senior Steve Deer (f) as fourth-place finisher Kevin Ball (e), senior, was on his tail trying to make up the lap difference. The importance of the race was evident in the faces of the riders (c—sophomore Lloyd Tucker) and in the last-minute pre-race preparations of the bike teams (b). The 60-lap feature was preceded by the girls' elimination tricycle races. First place winners in the 36-team field were '71 graduates Dana Howard, Linda Lawrence, Pam Manter, and Sandy Smith (a—with Sandy Smith receiving the trophy

Good Luck to the '72's

The Northwest tennis team appeared as a serious threat in the 1971 spring tennis season as Coach Don Thompson's squad ended their year with a 7-11 slate. The team started slowly with six losses in their first seven matches, but bounced back to capture six of the next eight matches. The streak ended as they failed to gain a victory in the last three tries. Senior Steve Clear (b) was number one man, while his doubles partner, senior Jim Blair, posted the best individual record, an even 9-9. Team members Jeff Berty (a), Terry Cain, and Jim Lawton, '71 played their last year for Northwest.

Maintaining consistency was a problem for golf Coach Jim Albright. Pioneer linksmen bested their opponents eleven times while dropping ten matches and tying one. The squad was hopeful for a city title, but had to settle for second best to Cathedral. Jim Reinstatler led the team by sharing medalist honors in the city tournament. Reinstatler, Mike Zoretich, Steve Lammert, and Dale Thomas, '71, were lost through graduation, but seniors Jerry Hoover (c) and Gregg Shires (d) returned for 1972 action. The Pioneer golfers finished the season strong by winning seven of their last eleven matches, climaxing the year with a fifth place in the sectionals.

Lack of experience in field events hampered Coach Vernon McCarty's sophomore-dominated 1971 varsity track team. Jeff King, '71, Bob Blevins (c), junior, and Mike Kimbrough (a), senior, led runners while juniors James Collins and James Hester (d) excelled in the high jump and shotput, respectively. The loss of state champions Bill Hicks and Mike Larrison, '70, was deeply felt as Northwest placed sixth in the City meet and 15th in the sectional. Coach McCarty blamed the poor showing on the loss of team members due to poor grades and injuries. Hopes for an improved season in 1972 were built on the excellent showing of the junior varsity tracksters, who, led by juniors Greg Dunn (b) and Mike DeJaeger (e), finished their year undefeated in meet competition. The freshmen, who also participated in junior varsity events, lost their only meet to Howe and placed sixth in the City meet.

Powerful Pioneer pitching was the nucleus of Coach Don Stone's (b)—shown with Dave Cassell, '71) varsity baseball team as Bill Dunham (a) and Tom Reed, '71, chalked up 8-1 and 6-3 hurling records, respectively. John Pourcho's (c) .420 batting average and Reed's .392 mark led the team in hitting. The varsity was defeated in the first game of the City Tourney by Brood Ripple and by Pike in the sectional, both teams avenging earlier losses to the Pioneers. Individual honors went to junior Darrell Bohall (d) who pitched a no-hitter against Ritter, and Mike Hinderliter, '71, who was selected as an All-City Outfielder. The reserve squad enjoyed a 15-4 record supported by southpaw pitchers Mark Moore, senior, and Greg Gillespie, junior. Moore's .410 batting average and senior Gary Wier's 18 stolen bases led the team offensively. Led by the hitting of Doug Burries and Mike Smith, Coach Rick George's freshman baseballers won three of their eight encounters.

Gridders grow up

Lack of experience hampered Coach Larry Compton's gridgers as the Pioneers lost eight of ten grid battles.

Compton (a—with Gary Wier, #22 and Gary Stonehouse #14) was forced to play more sophomores than seniors since the roster contained only six returning lettermen. This factor subtracted experience and leadership from the team's chances. Fundamental blocking and tackling along with a simplified Wishbone-I running attack were major parts of Northwest's game plan. Sporting a schedule that included a bye week, ranked in the top 20, the young team did not lose spirit. After bowing to Shortridge, South Vigo, Chatard, and Southport, NHS rallied to defeat Wood, 30-21. The following week, sophomore Jett Kirkman booted the first NHS field goal towards the defeat of Howe, which marked the first back-to-back Pioneer victories since 1966. Washington (b) then snapped the streak, 48-6; Ben David and North Central followed suit with shutout victories over the Pioneers, ending the season 2-8. Senior Gary Wier (a—#22), named most valuable player, and junior Greg Dunn (c) provided blocking in the backfield for Mark Haab, junior, who led rushers with 463 yards for 5.7 yards per carry. Quarterbacking duties went to junior Mike Mutz (e) and sophomore Dana Standefer while junior Roy Byrd and senior Bob Kinley (d) led on the receiving end with Byrd snagging three touchdown catches. The Northwest defense allowed 272 points, 104 of them coming during the second quarter of action. However, the offense lit the scoreboard more often than any Pioneer team in four years by racking up 78 points.

The junior varsity showed sparks of brilliance in an otherwise uneventful season. Exploding with a 20-0 win over Broad Ripple, Coach Ed Dwyer's gridgers stumbled over Shortridge and Chatard before regaining their momentum with wins against Southport and Wood. The reserves rounded out the year battling to a 14-14 tie with westside rival Washington and then bowing to Howe and Ben Davis. Dana Standefer called signals for the Panthers and gained varsity experience along with other members of the squad (b)—Paul Morgan, junior; Tim Potter, sophomore; Mike Mutz, junior; and James Hester, junior. Juniors Greg Dunn and Harry Myers and sophomore Robert Price (a—#41) completed the backfield for the 3-4-1 reserves. Coach Richard George's freshmen eleven rested their hopes on the throwing arm of quarterback Kirt Richmond. Richmond's favorite targets were wide receivers John Hester and Steve Kirpiss, while Roger Haygood, Jeff Trout, and Jim Slavens carried the ball for the Panthers. Their 2-5-1 record included victories over Broad Ripple and Wood. Unity and spirit were developed for varsity, junior varsity, and freshmen teams at summer practice which began August 12, 1971 (e). During the season, coaches maintained inspiration by assigning footballers to read in Reader's Digest "Pro Football's one-man Demolition Squad," (f) an article lauding the dedication of pro linebacks. Cheerleaders also fired up footballers by leading the crowd in spirited yells. Junior varsity cheerleaders (c) Lisa Burrows, sophomore; Patty Jenkins and Shannon Roach, juniors, served the junior varsity gridgers as well as the varsity. However, the girls occasionally reflected the frustration of a losing season. (d)—juniors Lisa Griffen and Terry Switzer). Hopes for a successful 1972 season rest on the eight sophomores who lettered for varsity play. Roy Byrd, Vance Stratton, and Gary Wier received honorable mention on the All-City team selected by the Indianapolis Star. Stratton achieved similar recognition from the News and also won the team's academic award. Seven seniors—Jim Dimitraff, Sam Dotlich, Tim Johnson, Bob Kinley, Randy McKinley, Stratton and Wier—played their last year for Northwest. Coach Compton hoped the experience gained by underclassmen would compensate for the loss.

Determined Pioneer cross country harriers (a) finished their season strong after a disappointing start. Coach Vernon McCarty's squad won ten of the sixteen meets. Mike Blevins, junior; Steve Wilbur, senior; Terry Meyers, sophomore (b); and Jim Yates, freshman did well as the Pioneers swept the Brownsburg Invitational and the last three dual meets. Meyers and Yates ran well in the sectional as the harriers finished seventh out of 22 teams. Juniors Greg Westrick, Randy Webber (c), and Louie Garrison completed the squad. Freshman Yates surprised everyone with a two-mile time of 10:22, the best Pioneer freshman time since city champion Bill Hicks, '70. The reserves compiled a 5-6 ledger, placing fourth in the City Meet while the freshmen cross country runners split their two meets.

Athletically-minded Pioneers developed a number of diversified, physically demanding skills by taking an energetic part in school-sponsored recreational activities.

Those having a flair for tennis found contention in the Northwest Bowling League to be a first-class test of their abilities. (b—Chris Hickman, senior; c—Jeff Hunt, junior). The two leagues of competition, composed of 23 teams consisting of two boys and two girls each, practiced at the Eagle Bowl on Monday afternoons after school. Their successful season was concluded with the presentation of trophies to the highest ranking teams and players.

From bowling to badminton

A unique Saturday experience for many Northwest students and teachers was the exploration of caves located in southern Indiana. Robert Canner, Stan Irwin, James Albright, Don Thompson, and Rex Hedegard, science teachers, guided some 45 mud-covered spelunkers through the cool confines of Sullivan's, Buckner's, Danahoe's, and Blue Springs caves. Attired in old blue jeans, sweatshirts, and sneakers, the explorers walked, crawled, squeezed, and waded through the caves for anywhere from four to six hours. (a—Pete Danahue, Greg Heady, Mike Roberts, Jeff Lammert, Vicki Walfe, and Angie Jacobs). Helmets, candles, flashlights, and matches were included in the spelunkers' standard equipment and served as safety precautions as well as aids in the observation of cave structures.

Physical education classes relieved students of classroom stress as they were allowed to exercise their bodies as well as their minds. Students were graded on athletic skills and achievements like basketball and badminton. (e—Sandy Bright; f—Denise Johnson; c—Andrew Wilson, Anthony Bond, all freshmen.) Physical education instructors emphasized a well-balanced program for complete physical fitness.

Coach Ed Dwyer's (a) grapplers found the wrestling mat a little harder as they compiled a 4-8 dual meet record. The mediocre season was attributed to a lack of experience—only five of the initial 42 wrestlers were seniors. However, the season did have its bright moments. The Pioneers scored decisive victories over Attucks and Carmel, two perennially rugged powers. Junior Bob "Bo" Tillery was outstanding in the 185-lb. weight class, pinning nine foes while compiling a perfect 10-0 dual-meet record. Senior Kevin Clayton (c-e), 119-lb. class, placed second in both the sectional and the regional after completing a 7-4 year. Vance Stratton (f) senior heavyweight, fared well, winning 7 of 10 matches and finishing third in the sectional. Gary Wier, John Klemen, and Ken Alderson added senior experience while juniors Brent Carter, Bruce Hickman, David Carter, Peter Donahoe, and Greg Dunn (b) saw a regular action on the varsity level.

Sophomore Don Klemen copped the 119-lb. reserve city and Mooresville Tourney titles for a reserve squad that won four of eleven meets.

Coach Ron Schmink called on freshman to patch holes in a team that had only five regular J-V members. The reserves also included Doug Bert, Martin Morgan, Robin Short, and Mike Martin. After dropping their first three meets, freshman wrestlers whipped into shape and registered a final 7-3-2 slate.

Ken Fuld, Julius Read, Doug Dunn, Russ Schenke, Carl Ragland, and Tony Pappas did well as first-year matmen.

Bucks, Flunkies coop titles

Nearly 300 boys participated in intramural basketball, the largest extracurricular activity at Northwest. The program, in its second year, was directed by Bob Burns, math teacher. The regular season began in early December with the formation of teams in two leagues, freshman-sophomore and junior-senior, with names like Blue Ribbon Boys, Green Goliaths, and the Incompetents (d—Jim Wetzel, senior). In late February, playoffs began in each division with the Dudleytown Farmers and the Flunkies as top seeds. Upsets occurred in tournament action before the finals; the junior-senior division saw the Bucks and the Pros (b—Vernie Taylor, Gary Huston, Ron Klinge, Curtis Gregory, and Roger Bates with referee Charles Rose) while the Flunkies and the Battles Royal met in the freshman-sophomore class (c—Lindsay Williams and Dave Beninger; f—Mark Taylor and Williams). The Bucks (a—Front: Anthony Morton, Coach Curtis Harrington, Gary Kirk; Back: James Lester, Vernie Taylor, James Hester, Curtis Gregory) and the Flunkies (e—Rich Quinette, Bob McAdams, David Jacobs, Lindsay Williams, David Bragg, Casey Vann) captured their respective league crowns and trophies.

Cagers' success story

Varsity roundballers enjoyed their third consecutive successful season, compiling a 12-9 slate. The Space

Pioneers displayed promise early in the season by winning eight of their first nine contests, including victories over rivals Washington and Attucks, while losing only to eventual city champ Arlington.

The schedule became more demanding as local powerhouses eeked out narrow decisions over the cagers, which led to their losing the final six contests; county champ North Central and highly-regarded Plainfield victimized the Pioneers by one-point margins. A sharp Speedway ball club erased Pioneer hopes for a third straight sectional title by defeating Northwest in overtime, 83-78.

Board power was the backbone of Coach Bill Ritter's team with two excellent junior boardmen. Dale "Sookie" Taylor (c) pumped in 16.7 points per game while snaring numerous rebounds. Jim

Collins (f), junior, was close behind, rippling the nets for 15 points per game. Three seniors completed the starting outfit. Guard John Pourchot (e) demonstrated fine outside shooting while Jim Fowler (b) stifled opponents with tenacious defense and key rebounds. Dick Beuke (d) scared timely baskets. Senior Mike Carn and junior Roy Byrd were called on for backcourt duty. Seniors Danny Dunbar (a) and Charles "Poo-Poo" Rose supplied ample support from the bench

Assistant varsity Coach Bob Groomer guided the reserves to a 12-7 mark, their third winning record in the three years. Juniors Greg Gillespie (a—with Coach Groomer) and Bob Rance along with sophomores Gary Stonehouse and Dana Standerfer (e) showed promise for next year's varsity squad; several members dressed varsity and warmed up with the team before games (b). Led by Rodney Jackson (c) with 176 season points, the Pioneer freshman team posted a 6-12 record. Coach Jim Berger's players practiced skills in preparation for upcoming years. Second to Jackson in scoring was Earlon Hollowell with 121 points, while Paul Reams, Mike Miszerak, Dean Ransom, and David Hunt rounded out the frosh squad. Freshman cagers received support from the first-year cheerleading team (d)—Tina Dalton, Sandy Kemery, Tracy McGrew, Sandy Smith.)

A mummy case may be a strange Christmas present, but it was only one of the many unusual gifts that were delivered to the Stanley residence in the Pioneer Players' fall production of Moss Hart and George Kaufman's three-act comedy, "The Man Who Came to Dinner." The play was focused on a famous author of the late 1930's who, confined to a wheelchair, managed to disrupt the lives of the entire Stanley household.

Miss Phyllis Walters, English teacher, directed the play with Hubert Fryman, senior, portraying the lead character, Sheridan Whiteside. Also appearing in major roles were Laura Huber, junior, as Maggie Cutler; and Chris Galloway, senior, as Bert Jefferson.

Members of Pioneer Players joined with stage manager Jared Jamison, senior, and the stagecraft class to prepare the sets. A technique used for the first time, scrambling, which involved dipping a cloth in paint and rolling it onto a hard surface, simulated wallpaper for the Stanley home. A wheelchair borrowed from the Civic Theatre and a mummy case made by the stagecraft class also added realistic touches to the set.

The single performance of "The Man Who Came to Dinner" was presented in Northwest's auditorium November 19, 1971.

Many parents would have appreciated their sons getting haircuts—any kind of haircuts. This hope became reality for parents whose sons were in the cast of "South Pacific," Northwest's spring musical. Striving to make the play as authentic as possible, the boys had their hair cut in "burrs," similar to those required by U.S. Army regulations of the 1940's.

"South Pacific" took place on two small islands in the Pacific Ocean during World War II, and revolved around the battles that were fought there and the impressions they left on four people's lives. Two love affairs developed during the course of the story. One involved Nellie Forbush, an American nurse and Emil de Beque, a native French planter of the islands; the other concerned Lieutenant Cable, a United States Marine officer and Liat, a beautiful native girl. The underlying theme of the play as a whole dealt primarily with racial prejudice.

Efforts to obtain genuine costumes and properties were also made. Uniforms for the soldiers were acquired from the Naval Armory as well as a number of other sources. The scenery created some difficulty, however, as students enrolled in stagecraft were asked to construct a mountain with a real waterfall.

The pit orchestra performed Rogers and Hammerstein's musical score at both presentations of "South Pacific" March 24 and 25 in Northwest's auditorium.

Band plays a successful tune

With precision, skill, and harmony, the Northwest Marching Band with Director Darrel Horton stepped to several awards and distinctions.

Beginning at the end of school, the music department offered a half-credit band course in summer school; the course not only taught the basics of band marching, but also served as a testing ground for formations and routines. Several Silverettes and feature twirlers Shirley Cash, senior, and Sherrie Williamson, junior, attended a week-long summer workshops at Vincennes University, while majorette Karon Lawrence, sophomore, participated in the Smith-Walbridge Drum Major Camp. Summer work was climaxed by two weeks of concentration practice in the August heat in preparation for the Northwest Jamboree, August 28.

An attraction at all home football games was the half-time show provided by the marching band, Silverettes, and feature twirlers. The ensemble treated football fans to programs like the one that gained them their fourth consecutive first division rating in the advanced Group I at the State Marching Contest at Southport High School, October 9. Veteran's Day Parade spectators also had an opportunity to watch the band in action as they marched in the October 25 event downtown.

Band uniforms, purchased in Spring, 1970, were still being paid off with receipts from the band's annual candy sale in October. Members sold the familiar chocolate-almond bars to neighbors and students for 50 cents. A $300 gift certificate from Nick Craig Studios went to senior Steve Clear for selling the most candy.

Northwest Vocal and instrumental groups were active in a variety of contests and concerts throughout the city.

The band directed by Darrell Horton started off the year with the routine switch from marching to concert season. For the first time ever, the band was divided into A, B, and C groups; A band was composed of seasoned performers, B band consisted mostly of freshmen, and C band was a group of individuals just learning to play an instrument. A band participated in the Christmas, spring, and awards concerts as well as a band contest in April.

Dance Band, a select group of band members, specialized in music with a jazz flavor. They performed at such school and community functions as PTA meetings, the Toy and Hobby Show at the State Fairgrounds, and various local dances. They attended clinics to learn methods for improving their sound and also entered stage band contests at Vincennes and Notre Dame in the spring. Several individuals, as well as the group as a whole, competed in the State Solo and Ensemble contest. They formed the nucleus of the pit orchestra for "South Pacific," and ended the year performing in Northwest's annual spring jazz concert.

The orchestra, playing music of a more classical nature, was another major Northwest instrumental group. This group also performed in the Christmas, spring, and awards concerts, and entered a state contest in the spring. A few members of the orchestra formed a string quartet which competed in the February Solo and Ensemble contest. Several orchestra members assisted the Dance Band in playing music for "South Pacific," the spring musical.

The Concert Choir, directed by James Kantarze, was the largest ever. Performing in the three major department concerts, they also entered a choir contest and choir festival in late spring. Choir sang at several community functions, sang Christmas carols on the Circle downtown, and performed Handel's Messiah at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church.

Swing Choir, a group of mixed voices, sang more contemporary tunes. Belles, an all-girl ensemble, also presented popular music. Both groups performed at several functions outside of school and were featured in the "Strictly Jazz" concert in the spring.

Madrigals was a newly-formed mixed voice group and sang century old songs in a cappella style. Madrigals entered the Solo and Ensemble contest in February.

Performing a variety of songs ranging from classical to modern, the Concert Club sang in the Christmas and Spring concerts at Northwest. They also entered a state vocal contest and sang in the all-city concert club festival in the spring.

Music, be it rock or symphonic, nonsensical or meaningful, contributed immensely to students' cultural lives for it provided an ideal expression of youth's constantly changing moods.

Radio, a common source of musical satisfaction, was produced in a variety of portable and transistorized models and was therefore, easily accessible to the majority of students. WNAP (FM) which primarily featured hard rock in stereo with hourly news broadcasts was a favorite with many. Chris Conner, generally accepted as the most amusing disc jockey, entertained his listening audience with such recordings as Don McLean's "American Pie," Melanie's "Brand New Key," and "The Concert For Bangla Desh" by George Harrison and Friends. For those preferring AM radion stations, WIFE, also specializing in popular music, was rated number one. In addition to newscasts which were furnished every thirty minutes, listeners enjoyed the Carpenter's "Hurting Each Other," Badfinger's "Day After Day," and James Taylor's "You've Got A Friend." Both of these stations rated Three Dog Night's "Joy To The World" as the number one song for 1971. WTLC (FM) offered "soul stereo for the black community" and introduced the characteristic disc-jockey, Spiderman. "Spider" delighted his audience with the Stylistics' "You Are Everything," Isaac Hayes' "Theme From Shaft," and the Temptations' "Just My Imagination."

Record and album sales also mirrored students' musical tastes and preferences. Among the top-selling single hits were "I'd Like To Teach the World to Sing" by the

New Seekers Hillside Singers, Jonathon Edward's "Sunshine," and Nilsson's "Without You." Some of the most widely purchased albums were Carole King's "Music," Chicago's "Chicago At Carnegie Hall," Isaac Haye's "Black Moses," "Concert for Bangla Desh" by George Harrison and Friends, and Melanie's "Gather Me."

Students found additional musical fulfillment as they attended concerts by noted groups and vocalists making personal appearances in Indianapolis at Clowe's Memorial Hall and the Coliseum located on the State Fairgrounds. Tickets for these concerts ranged in price anywhere from $4 to $10, and there were invariably "full house" audiences when groups like Three Dog Night, Chicago, the Jackson Five, Beach Boys, and Rare Earth performed. Diana Ross, Tom Jones, Sonny and Cher, and Neil Diamond were a few of the individual vocalists who attracted record-breaking crowds to their concerts.

Although dancing was formerly one of the most prevalent methods of self-expression for youth, the novelty, somehow, wore off. While dances such as the "Breakdown," the "Jed Clampett," and the "Penguin" were successful with students; for the most part, those who did dance preferred to create original steps to suit their distinctive personalities.

Students follow their own fashion lead

Originality was the keynote to fashion trends; hot pants, wedgies, crocheted shrink vests, bodysuits, capes, and the layered look were all characteristics of students' wardrobes. While some favored the midi, which varied in length from just below the knee to just above the ankle, others preferred above-the-knee hemlines or coordinated pantsuits. Knickers and gauchos accessorized with laced-up suede or leg-hugging stretch boots were also stylish. A considerable number of boys' wardrobes included vividly colored wide ties and wallpaper print shirts; and sweaters with animal designs, hearts, and ships were a success with boys as well as girls.

Evidence of primitive influence appeared in embroidered peasant blouses and accessories made of wood, shells, stones, beads, and leather. Laced up Victorian-style and hammered with decorative studs, belts were hard and wide with ornate buckles of slim and soft macramés. The furred, fringed, suede and tapestry shoulder bags were usually pouchy and soft.

Blue jeans, a casual and comfortable favorite with many, were trimmed with studs in the shapes of stars and eagles, colorful embroidery, and flag emblems. Army boots, denim jackets, and flannel shirts completed the unconventional look.

Wide-banded Mickey Mouse and Spiro Agnew wrist-watches were a hit and wire-rimmed glasses were worn most often than not. "Smiley" faces appeared on everything including clothing, jewelry, purses, candles, mobiles, cards, and stationery.

Girls generally favored hairstyles that were either long and straight or short in layered shag cuts. For the most part, boys wore their hair long; full sideburns, beards, and mustaches became more commonplace.

Sporting apparel and accessories that represent individual tastes are: (a) Michelle Jones, senior, wearing a midi and platform-heeled boots; (b) Karen White, junior, comfortable in a peasant blouse, jeans, and a tapestry shoulder bag; (c) senior Louis Motley with a colorful wallpaper coat; (d) ROTC Girls' Drill Team members, trying on white stretch boots for their uniforms; (e) Beth Chasteen, sophomore, in a hotpants outfit, crocheted hat, and leg-hugging stretch boots; and (f) junior Diane Williamson and senior Michele Davenport wearing popular hot pants, and senior Jo Waldron in traditional skirt and blouse, at Homecoming half-time ceremonies.

Senior Recognition day was one occasion when even the most anti-establishment students enjoyed swapping their every-day blue jeans and T-shirts for their Sunday best. High spirits and red roses purchased with senior dues identified seniors on this special October 13 event.

Mrs. Doris Bradford gave her senior English 7 students an opportunity to record their feelings that day and have them presented in Vanguard.

Showing that Senior Recognition Day brightened the regular routines of a school day are (a) Sam Dotlich, Jim Dimitroff, and David Dukes; (b) Phil Wolfe; (c) Chet Crump and junior Terri Poland; (d) Gloria Edmundson; (e) Leslie Malane.

(f) Working many hours evaluating student writing, Northwest Passages staff members Brenda Obenchain, Mary Malloy, and editor Nancy Harris, juniors, concentrate on their thoughts.

To communicate individual thoughts and the ideas of others, some students found a sufficient outlet in working for school-sponsored publications. They did this with a good degree of independence, for censorship was virtually nonexistent.

News Bureau, Northwest's link with local and city newspapers, provided such an outlet for senior Bonnie Salmon. "I really get a lot of satisfaction working on News Bureau," she said. "Our job is to give credit to all deserving students—not just the 'big names' that are always written about." News Bureau director Konnie Hornsby, junior, added that it was sometimes hard for students to realize how much copy was actually written because what was printed depended on the editors of each paper.

Students' imaginative thoughts received attention in Northwest Passages, an annual anthology of student writings. With the exception of editor-in-chief, who was appointed by Mrs. Doris Bradford, adviser, staff members were selected by ballot in sophomore and junior English classes. Editor Nancy Harris, junior, explained the literary magazine's new format: "We used pages of photography and quotations from David Burk's poem 'Reflections' to divide the book into sections. The poem was used as our central theme and was written out entirely in the middle of the book."

VANGUARD, with adviser Mrs. Gwen Mannweiler, took an original approach to reporting the history of the year through the use of a magazine format and a theme dealing with the entire students' life rather than only its school-related aspects. "In order to better represent the entire scope of a student's life," said editor Steve Gano, senior, "we are using more graphics and a freer design than every

To clarify the fact that Telstar was a student paper, the staff added to their masthead: "Opinion expressed are not necessarily those of the school administration." Senior Scott Daniels, fall editor-in-chief explained, "We changed the make-up of Telstar from a traditional style to one which arranges type into blocks and panels so as to create a more appealing paper." Revised staff appointments made by spring editor, Fred Miller, senior, and adviser James Ray attempted to make the paper's production more efficient.

Students experiment

Students experimented with sight and sound to express themselves with speech and debate, audio-visual activities, and radio and television broadcasting.

Although debating has always taken a back seat to speech at Northwest, Mrs. Betty Fryer, English teacher, organized the school's first debate team. Formed from students of her speech classes, the team competed with novice and advanced teams from surrounding schools as well as intramurally to gain experience in the new area.

Members of the audio-visual club, sponsored by Norman Tripp, industrial arts teacher, learned the intricate procedures of operating closed-circuit taping instruments. Other groups benefitted from the club's activities; tapes of Pioneer Player rehearsals, football and basketball games, and marching band and Silverettes performances helped the groups realize and correct their errors.

Applied radio and television, a two-credit vocational course taught at the Indianapolis Public Schools' Instructional Broadcast Center, prepared Charles Van Sant and Kevin Huston, seniors, for future work in broadcasting. They drove to the center each day to work with the studio's cameras, video consoles, and radio equipment for IPS radio station WIAN and video tapes for the use of the public schools. "The purpose of the course, said Charles, "is to take people who know little or nothing about broadcasting and make them broadcasters."

Mankind's search for immortality...

The culture of high school life involved many modes of expression; the most permanent of these expressions are graphic—writing and art. With the cooperation of Mr. Doris Bradford, Northwest Pages adviser, and Joe Reynolds, art department chairman, this collection of original student compositions and artwork is presented as representing the scope of creativity of Northwest students.

Progress

I remember when my grandfather used to go out and plow for hours and hours so he could plant his crops. When he came home he would be tired and disgusted because his crops would never grow. It took him awhile, but after ten years of babying that soil, he finally started getting some results. And then progress came along and took his farm away from him. Because he never learned how to use the great mass of machinery that replaced his old horse and plow, he was forced to quit doing what he loved to do most. Now he is a lonely and forgotten man with nothing to do but dream of the farm he had years ago before progress took over.

My Pal Budgie

While Budgie didn't live during my childhood, he didn't quite live during my adulthood either. Budgie was an addition to my life during sixth grade—1966. It had been about five years since a parakeet had lived at the Van Sant house, and both my mother and I decided to get another one.

We drove one evening to the old Kresge's store (now Golf-O-Mat) in Eagle Dale Plaza and walked back to the bird section. We selected a green parakeet with dark aqua-blue tail. When the saleslady tried to bring him out, however, the bird began to flutter about. We lost track of that one so she pulled out another one—Budgie. It was the best mistake she ever made.

Once we took him home and got him in his cage, he became a skilled acrobat. On his perch, he would turn somersaults. When we let him out, he would fly wildly back and forth in the kitchen. As Budgie became familiar with our house, he would fly almost anywhere we'd be, using our shoulders as a perch.

He would spend hours with me in my room chirping. Soon I learned to mimic him, and he would chirp back. This pleased him and soon we would have regular conversations in parakeetese. I began to actually understand his tone of voice and would mimic back in like manner.

When he chirped like that, he would bob his head up and down. I started to do it, too, and soon every time I shook my head, Budgie would shake his, too. Though I was his master, he trained me how to be a bird.

We became so accustomed to each other, he would fly down to my plate and eat my food. His favorite treat was to nibble at my bacon in the morning. He once even sipped my cola, perched on my glass. There was no food he wouldn't try.

His bathtime was also something to behold. I would turn the water on sprinkle, cup my hands beneath it, and Budgie would fly down. He waded through my water-filled hands like a pond duck. There was so much he did that there is no room to tell it. He was as close to a human being as a bird could be.

I mention him now because last night (Sunday) at about 6:55 Budgie died. I lost the best pal I ever had—a parakeet.

As the blossom opens up to the morn,
I feel a warm, awakening breeze upon my heart.

As the day slowly disappears,
silently, magically,
I recall . . .

As the sun's warm rays shine gallantly
upon the petals,
And as the flower reaches out to the sky,

I reach out also But . . .

As a shadow falls over the flower,
And its petals begin to close,
Hiding from the dark emptiness of the night,

I realize
Pain, happiness; sorrow, joy;
Love
Is it worth it?

The Desert

When I was a child, I lived in Las Vegas for two years. There I lived with my grandparents. I enjoyed playing in the desert. It was hot and dry. The drab colors were very soothing to my eyes. I liked the soft brown of the sage brush and the tan sand of the dunes. In the background were large mountains with long, stretching shadows across the barren land of the West. There, I could think of my problems and straighten them out. The air was clear. I could see a hundred miles. It was quiet; everything was still. I enjoyed the desert; my mind was set free.

A Double Existence

"I do not want to be part of my brother." Chang told doctor after doctor. "I want to be separate!" But the greatest surgeons refused to undertake an operation that was feared might kill them both. It seemed hopeless.

After endless years of seeking physical separation, bitterly disappointed, Chang began to drink heavily. Even though Eng protested, Chang would ignore him and find peace within his bottle.

Their lives were lived as freaks. They were exhibited throughout Europe as the rarest aspect of life. In America they were displayed to thousands of people by P. T. Barnum. They were a popular attraction and brought many customers so they had saved a small fortune after working many years for Barnum.

But even their fortune could never buy them separation or happiness. They were bound to each other for life by a band of flesh at their torsos. Chang and Eng were the inseparable Siamese twins. God and man made no attempt to separate them.

After 45 years of constant companionship and with no hope of separation, Chang and Eng became very bitter towards one another. Chang would result to violence and sometimes cruelly beat his brother and then turn towards his bottle for comfort. Eng withstood his brother's blows physically, but mentally he was building a burning hatred toward his brother. His heart had turned cold and he had changed. No more did he talk but retreated into a world of silence. Each day it grew worse; days went by without a word spoken.

Finally, one night after finishing his bottle, Chang broke the silence. "What in the hell's wrong with you? You know it's torture for me, too. Speak!"

No reply came from Eng but a blank look. Chang violently struck his brother, causing him to lose his breath and gasp.

"I hate you, my brother!" cried Eng.

Chang began to laugh and Eng once again withdrew into his world of silence and no more was spoken.

Three long years passed as they continued their bitter fighting and quarreling. Chang suffered from bronchitis because of his drinking. Eng could not return to reality and showed signs of insanity. Their fortune had disappeared, and they were left penniless. They joined a small circus, but the money they made could not support them both. With this new problem Eng became very violent inside. His hatred had grown so much that he could no longer hold back.

That night, a terrible bloody scream disturbed the silence.

"Oh, my God! What are you doing?" cried Chang.

But nothing could stop Eng. His hands were painted with blood while he muttered "I'll soon be free."

Chang tried to put up a struggle but became sick to his stomach while Eng continued his evil deed. Blood was all over as he hacked at the band of flesh. Although he was weak, something inside made him continue. Freedom from his brother was his insane thought. Soon Eng completed his crude operation. He put down his knife and lay beside his brother. His body was weak from loss of blood.

Now he looked at his brother and touched him saying "We are free. But no reply came from his brother's cold lips. Eng didn't realize death was payment for this freedom. And now realizing what he had done, he retreated back into his world of silence forever.

No different from anyone else, I have my likes and dislikes. But there are times when you really dislike something all because you don't think you can do it and it presents a challenge to you. With me it was boxing.

Everyone had been telling me I should try boxing. I didn't know anything about it, and I thought it would be fun to try. Thus, I got on the boxing team at the Community Center and began my training.

After about a month, I was scheduled for my first bout. I was confident, but confidence doesn't win a fight, and I took a beating. I left the ring with an extra lip, a broken nose, and a broken heart. I lost my second bout also. Now I felt like quitting. I had made it up in my mind that I hated boxing. But there was something in me that wouldn't let me. I kept trying to improve my style and technique with no real objective in mind. It's no fun training day after day and getting hurt. But what makes you keep on despite the risks? I think that my hate for boxing is really my love for it.

(a) Working as a veterinarian's assistant at the Westside Animal Clinic gives junior Becky Moore a chance to work with all types of animals, from dogs to iguanas.

(c) While earning money for college or personal expenses, David Carter, junior, finds his job at Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream a good chance to observe human nature.

"The working world outside is so different—so adult. The sudden responsibility made me realize how much growing up I had to do. It's such a change from high school—they don't spoon-feed you out there."

Northwest students agreed that school life and employment were two separate worlds; they felt that knowledge gained from individual experiences proved as valuable as the money.

Over 60 per cent of Northwest upperclassmen were employed at some time during the year and the majority of these did not work to support themselves or their families, but were saving for extra expenses and for the future. Laura Munn, senior, felt that her job helped her to learn to budget her time as well as her money, "Just about all of my money went into the bank for college," she said. Gregg Shires, senior, felt that it would have been hard to get along without some financial assistance from his parents. "All of the money I earned went into the bank for college or I used it for dates," he explained.

Searching for a job was a problem for students due to the high rate of unemployment and a lack of available time. In general, those who did find jobs considered themselves lucky and enjoyed their work.

David Carter, junior, felt that his job at an ice cream store provided him with the opportunity to study people. "It's interesting trying to guess what kind of ice cream people are going to buy. Sometimes the personalities are reflected by the ice cream they choose.

Lafayette Square and other local businesses provided students with a variety of cashier and behind-the-counter positions as well as stockroom and warehouse jobs. A large percentage of students worked in restaurants and grocery stores, others preferred to babysit or deliver in their spare time.

cleaning the house vans in a chicken restaurant to selling merchandise at an art show.

Terri Switzer, junior, said that for the most part she was satisfied with her job at Villa Pizza. "It is fun if you don't mind going home covered with pizza sauce." Becky Moore, junior, felt that working at Westside Animal Clinic gave her the "opportunity to see what it is really like to be a veterinarian."

Senior Allison Kemery claimed that she gained much more from her job than just money. "The job I had in a department store cashroom forced me to stand on my own two feet. I learned to make careful decisions on my own and before I knew it, I had built up my self-confidence."

Although job placement was not a required duty of guidance counselors, students found willing assistance from this department. Mr. Richard Cummins, head of the guidance department said, "It is no inconvenience for us. We just try to find jobs that fit students' personalities and schedules." Guidance office files held information regarding types of employment, qualifications needed and applications for various positions. Mr. Cummins also placed calls to several businesses searching for openings. "A lot depended on the person's initiative. I simply introduced students to the possibilities of employment because I had access to the resources."

Miss Diane Hibblen, who was interested in job placement for students was Miss Diane Hibblen, coach of girls. "I knew of girls whose abilities suited the job, so I merely told them about it," she said. Sandy Smith, senior, accredited Miss Hibblen with alerting her to the opportunity for secretarial work at the Indianapolis Museum of Art. "I really appreciated Miss Hibblen's help. The work is ideal—I choose my own hours so there isn't conflict with school activities or homework."

Business department head, Miss Marguerite Lamar also went out of her way calling various firms and inquiring about job openings. Employers had such good luck with Northwest students, that they began calling Miss Lamar to ask if there were others she could recommend. In addition, Miss Lamar helped students enter college, obtain scholarships, and find interesting business-oriented careers. "I enjoy dealing with the students' personal lives," she said. "I just try to find a niche they can fit into."

WHERE DOES SHE GO FROM HERE?

When she first found out she was pregnant, her first impulse was to run away. But at 17, and unmarried, where could she go? She ended up facing her parents with the truth. The conflicts and tensions resulted in her parents' divorce. She completed school, was graduated, and then married in her sixth month of pregnancy.

The story of this Northwest girl was in no way a new one, although the attitudes towards the situation became more open and honest. It was unlikely that the problem of teenage pregnancies could remain America's "skeleton in the closet," for statistics bore a startlingly high figure of unplanned births. A newscast disclosed the fact that Chinese teenagers were responsible for only one percent of their country's birthrate, while American teens were answerable for 17 per cent.

Sociologists and other researchers of human behavior stated that young adults tended to act out the permissive sexual ethic, which was based on the attitude that sex before marriage was all right if the two people loved each other.

Why this trend of permissiveness? It was not just another of the changes in time, brought about a new generation. Psychologists believed it to be more deeprooted than that. According to these behavioralists, young adults were seeking a security and fulfillment of emotional needs that the family failed to provide them. The basic unit of society, the family, underwent considerable turmoil and change in its living patterns. At any rate, the occurrence of pregnancy out of wedlock did exist, and in increasing numbers.

At Northwest, like any high school of its size, it was not uncommon for girls to withdraw as a result of pregnancy. Individual teachers who knew of these situations spent extra time giving whatever help could to the girls. There were also two home economic courses, home nursing and family living, which dealt with the physical and emotional needs of high school girls. Mrs. Pat Thomas, home economics teacher, felt that the attitude of most Northwest teachers was one of concern. Pregnant girls were allowed to remain in school as long as their health permitted if they did not disrupt the learning atmosphere. It appeared that this open approach lessened the curiosity and the gossipers. As one girl commented, "My pregnancy just hurried things; I was getting married anyway. I acted naturally excited about it, like it was nothing unusual, and I think my attitude influenced people around me."

A program in California, New York, Maryland, and a few other states allowed pregnant girls to continue school. These girls studied home care in the morning, and academic subjects in the afternoon. After the birth of the child, if she had no one to care for him, the mother was permitted to bring the baby to classes with her. This program strengthened the attitude of acceptance towards out-of-wedlock pregnancies and helped the mothers regain their self-respect. The atmosphere benefited everyone including parents, teachers, and students. The boys cleaned up their language, began opening doors, and even offered to push strollers. Frank, open honesty towards the unwed mother may have been the solution to an old, old problem.

However, not all teenage marriages were forced, by-products of pregnancy; some married at high school age simply because they felt they were both physically and emotionally ready. Yet other students believed that they had not had enough experience to know what they truly wanted from life, and were, consequently, unprepared to face the responsibilities that marriage involved.

UNCLE SAM WANTS WHO?

Having a birthday on either of the days March 6 or 7 would seem unimportant to most people, yet to able-bodied American males turning 19 years of age during 1972, those days have a special significance, for they were drawn first and second in the 1973 draft lottery.

"All my life I was never number one in anything so why now?" pleaded the luckless future draftee. Anguished cries such as this were not numerous around the halls of Northwest, but some senior 18 year-olds turning 19 during '72 were a little anxious as they were assigned lottery numbers in February.

A group of 105 Northwest youth did not have to wait on the draft to catch up or receive enlistment orders before they understood what the army meant. They comprised the cadets of ROTC. The cadets served in various capacities; a high morale was maintained with the aid of girl ROTC sponsors.

Cadets received military instruction in four levels of increasing complexity. The primary purposes of ROTC were not solely militarily-oriented. Of prime concern was the preparation of the cadet to be a better citizen.

Like other new courses, ROTC has undergone changes since its introduction to the Northwest curriculum four years ago in the fall of 1968. The classroom grading system was somewhat different. Sergeant Richard Heady, ROTC instructor, explained that a change in teaching routine allowed for a greater amount of student-cadet teaching.

Activities in ROTC increased. Besides fielding a rifle team, and award-winning drill team, ROTC also added a girls' drill team. In addition, the NHS ROTC sponsored a Military Ball for cadets, sponsors, and their dates.

Perhaps the greatest honor to verify the worth of ROTC came in February as NHS's own cadet Colonel James Whitaker, senior, was appointed to the United States Military Academy at West Point. The highest ranking cadet in the Indianapolis Public School System, Jim served this year as brigade commander. Jim was in charge of 1,600 cadets and sponsors throughout the IPS district.

With Jim as an example to follow, ROTC continued to aid in the development of fine citizens. The 105 hard-working youths enrolled in ROTC bore evidence of this.

The fact that a lottery took place in February pretty much summed up the military news of the 1971-72 school year. That is to say that the war in Southeast Asia continued. Yet fewer call-outs reduced U.S. participation in Vietnam ground action. The slow but gradual withdrawal of troops combined with the lessened draft calls to create a serious manpower shortage in the National Guard and Reserve units. Of course the move by national draft officials to give 19 year-olds the lowest priority for enlisting in those units did not help either.

On November 2, 1972, the Selective Service System established several new classifications and abandoned other unusable ones to smoothe the administrative handling of the lottery draft. A new classification, 1-H, an administrative holding category, was created for those not old enough to be drafted and those who passed the year of their prime draft exposure. All new registrants were classified 1-H and kept there until after the lottery drawing for their age group except for registrants who entered the service of joined Reserve units. A 1-H cutoff number was set by the National Director as a processing ceiling. Those registrants with lottery numbers below the 1-H cutoff were to have their files activated and were considered for reclassification into 1-A, or into other appropriate classifications.

These changes were effected with the eventual changeover to an all-volunteer force in mind. University, junior college, trade and technical school deferments were phased out of the system. This move was important to eliminate what was considered an inequity of the former system.

The clamor for the all-volunteer army was at an all-time high but it was just this intense want of such a system that may have prevented its attainment. Yet, for nearly every point in favor of all-volunteers, an equal and opposite view was taken. It was believed, however, that rugged, adventurous types would not be attracted to military service because of salary raises but rather be more concerned with professional pride, prestige, and elite status.

18-YEAR-OLDS FACE NEW RESPONSIBILITIES

For American youth, the passage of the twenty-sixth Amendment, which achieved final ratification June 30, 1971 and granted suffrage to all citizens 18 years and older, was a milestone event. It climaxed youth's growing involvement in national issues marked by expressions ranging from concern to violence.

Before the amendment was passed, Northwest students selected symbolism and the press to display their interest in the government. Though long hair and clothing of the counter-culture lost much of their impact when they became a common fashion for the masses, it nevertheless remained. The peace hand sign, created by British Prime Minister Winston Churchill as the "V for Victory," the peace symbol initiated by British "Ban the Bomb" groups; the earth-green ecology flag; and the clenched fist salute also became practically meaningless through their mass-reproduction on T-shirts, buttons, and bumper stickers. However, the newspaper proved a more potent voice. Not only did the school paper, the Telstar, take editorial stands on the anti-war Moratorium Day, the SDS, drug abuse penalties, Earth Day, and school desegregation, but also an "underground" newspaper, published by Northwest students gave its opinions in the few short weeks of its existence.

But still, no matter how creatively opinions were expressed with appearance or symbols, no matter how eloquently the press spoke out, the fact remained that students had no direct connection with their government.

(a) Sharing a solemn moment at the commencement of "Little 500" festivities, Chuck Wentzel '71 and Mayor Richard Lugar display their respect for the American flag.

(b) To obtain a better understanding of the voting concept, seniors Randy Thompson and Richard Rich experiment with a voting machine in their government class.

(c) Senior Darryl Rupe drew this cartoon, also printed in Telstar, to depict Governor Edward Whitcomb's negative vote for the passage of 18-year-old rights.

ment. Yet, with the proposal of the twenty-sixth Amendment to the Constitution, Northwest students built their hopes on its ratification; for they would then be able to make mature decisions that would have an effect on the government. Robin Downing, an 18-year-old senior, said, "I feel I'm important and responsible enough to express my thoughts and opinions, and to let people know how I feel."

A large portion of students agreed with Robin's opinion. Boys, however, added to her ideas with the often-voiced thought that if a young man is old enough to fight in Vietnam, he is old enough to vote. Joe Ambers, senior explained, "Since at 18, the government will expect us to go over and fight for our country, we should at least have the opportunity to choose who we want to fight and die for."

There were skeptics, even among those who stood to benefit from the measure. "I believe that young people are not sincere in a lot that they do," commented Dan Gagen, senior. "I feel that most of them will be apathetic about voting."

Whatever the opinions, on June 30, 1971, the Ohio House of Representatives voted 81-9 in favor of the Twenty-sixth Amendment, making it the thirty-eighth to do so, and completing the two-thirds majority needed to ratify the revision.

Though only a handful of Northwest students 18 years or over were directly effected by the change, the remaining students anticipated the new responsibility as a welcome addition or alternative to other modes of expression. Social studies courses took on new meaning as students prepared for the experience of voting; while some classes experimented with a mock voting machine, others discussed the major issues of the 1972 election.

On November 4, 1971, the new voters were given their first opportunity to vote. The major Indianapolis contest, that for mayor, between Democrat Dan Burton and Republican incumbent Richard Lugar, ended, as forecast, with Lugar on top; the 18 to 20 year-olds had not appreciably altered the outcome in either direction. yet the important fact was that enough youth voted, thus proving their sincerity in the matter. Senior Dick Beuke reasoned, "People went to all the trouble to get 18-year olds the privilege to vote; I figure I owe it to these people to show I'm responsible enough to deserve it."

The true test of 18 to 20 year-old suffrage will be the presidential election of 1972. Most of the Northwest Class of 1972 will have the right to vote. Whether or not they will live up to the pre-suffrage concern over national issues, whether they will unite behind one candidate or will make individual decisions, whether or not they are prepared to accept the responsibility of governmental participation remains to be seen.

CLASS OF 1972—

As always, seniors greeted graduation with mixed emotions—joy for the end of childhood, the coming of age; sadness for their departure from Northwest, friends, and security. From the beginning of the school year, they were a select group. Their schedule included Senior Parent Night, September 29; Senior Recognition Day, October 13; cap and gown measurements, November 12; end of the fall semester, when 61 Northwest seniors completed graduation requirements, January 28; Senior Class Day, June 1; Vespers, June 4. And Commencement. Diplomas went to 534 students—diplomas containing the last words of a four-year book of many chapters. June 7, 1972, graduation, the Class of '72, the end of the beginning.

(a) Silhouetted by the setting sun, two 1971 graduates march in the commencement procession to the tune of "Pomp and Circumstance."

(b) Senior class president Chuck Haberman, '71, leads the Class of 1971 in the traditional tassel ceremony.

(c) At the 1971 graduation exercise, vice principal George Gale introduces Mary Huber and Donna Loffland, '71, co-valedictorians.

FACULTY

While the primary objective of teachers was to help students learn, they, too, had time to pursue their own interests and broaden their educations. Mrs. Berry Niles, English department chairman and Mrs. Mable Pritchett, English teacher, attended the National Council of English Teachers in Las Vegas where they served on committees discussing ways to enliven English teaching. Mr. James Ray, English teacher, was a speaker at a session for journalism teachers at the Annual Conference of Columbia Scholastic Press Association in New York City.

Two foreign language teachers had the opportunity to discover Europe in the summer. Mrs. Doris Bradford, English and Latin teacher, vacationed with her family in Rome and England. Miss Elizabeth Brayton, French teacher, attended classes at Alliance Francaise, Paris University. While touring Europe, Miss Brayton also visited Germany, Italy, Switzerland, and Holland. Mr. Joseph Reynolds, art department chairman, displayed two pieces of sculpture in the Bethlehem Art Competition. A free standing sculpture of brass and bronze and a welded steel construction were exhibited at the Bethlehem Lutheran Church of Indianapolis November 14-28.

Outside activities in which all faculty were invited to participate were the annual faculty picnic in September at Bridgeport Nutrition Camp and the smorgasboard in May in the school cafeteria. Statistics compiled showed the factual picture of the staff. The Northwest faculty consisted of 108 members, 60 men and 48 women. The average age was 39 years while the average amount of teaching experience was 13 years. The average salary earned by the teaching staff was approximately $12,000. Of the 62 that taught at Northwest in its first year, 27 teachers remained. Of the three administrators that opened Northwest in 1963, Mr. Kenneth Smartz, principal, and Mr. George Gale, vice-principal remained; Mr. Harold Crawford, vice-principal, joined the staff in 1966.

In addition to the teaching staff, Northwest employed 34 cafeteria workers, 20 custodial and maintenance personnel, 10 secretaries and clerks, a nurse and a social worker.

Accompanying the photo of each faculty member is a personal statement of their philosophy of life, teaching goals, or an idea that they feel explains their existence at Northwest. Reflecting the mood or personality of each individual, the faculty wrote their own statements, borrowed from another's ideas, or refrained from making any comment.

KENNETH SMARTZ, principal: Most of our problems today could be solved if everyone would live by the Golden Rule—"Do unto others as you would have others do unto you."

HAROLD CRAWFORD, vice-principal

GEORGE GALE, vice-principal

JAMES BOLIN, business: The less you study the more knowledge you lose when you graduate.

MRS. DORIS BRADFORD, english, foreign language: If my students can look at life more honestly, share a greater concern for life's problems, and appreciate more fully beauty of life, our classes have been worthwhile.

MRS. JUDY HINSHAW, business: You get from something what you put into it.

JAMES KANTARZE, music: "In spite of all thou may'st left behind, live each day as if life were just begun." Man Goethe

WALLACE MACK, math: Use of the mind before the mouth will often eliminate the latter.

MRS. ALICE HAUSS, physical education: Life is too short to not have fun. Just be sure your fun is not detrimental to the welfare of others.

MRS. MARTHA HOBBS, English: "Hold fast to dreams, for without dreams, life is a broken-winged bird that cannot fly." Langston Hughes

WILLIAM KEARBY, industrial arts: I believe we should follow the old adage of "Work hard when we work and play hard when we play."

MRS. GWEN MANNWELLER, English: Keep on open mind You'd be surprised how much room in it hasn't been used up.

MRS. SONDRA HAYES, foreign language: Listen attentively to what you fellow man is saying and you will find a whole new world of communication.

MRS. JEANNE HOLLINGSWORTH, librarian: The happiest people seem to be those who have no particular reason for being happy except they are.

MRS. CONSTANCE KOCHMAN, English: Whatever you've heard about me is not true. It's worse.

LARRY MARKER, business: "A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds." Bacon

SGT. RICHARD HEADY, ROTC director: Never tell people how to do things. Tell them what to do and they will surprise you with their ingenuity.

MR. THOMAS HOPKINS, math: If you were to do the same quality work for an employer that you turn in at NHS would you be fired?

MISS MARGUERITE LAMAR, business department head: "If you didn't get the grade you wanted, it is highly possible I didn't get the work I wanted . . ." Unknown

EZELL MARRS, science: Doing your thing is not doing nothing. There is something in school for everyone.

PAUL HEATON, dean of boys: My primary objective is to create a behavioral atmosphere which is conducive to good learning experiences.

RALPH HORN, social studies department head: "The paradox of the times in which we live is that the biggest problems are really small—the atom, the ovum, and a touch of pigment . . ." Brunzel

ROGER LASH, math: You must learn to listen before you can listen to learn.

NICHOLAS MATES, industrial arts: If today was overage your heart beat 103,389 times, you breathed 23,040 times, spoke 4,800 words, moved 750 major muscles, and used 7,000,000 brain cells. The first two were involuntary; the second two depend on you; the last one on NHS

REX HEDEGARD, science: Unless you want events and blind fate to control you, you will have to set your sights and master yourself and your environment.

MRS. FEMIE RICHIE, foreign language department head: A loser is someone who does not approach every stranger as a potential friend.

J. WILLIAM RITTER, Physical education: "Many compete but only one can win the prize; run to win the prize." 1 Corinthians 9:23

MISS YOVANKA SAVICH, social studies

RONALD SCHMINK, science: Be yourself; life will be a false impression if you make false impressions of yourself.

MRS. JOAN SHOEMAKER, home economics: The art of living is beginning where you are.

DR. GILBERT SHUCK, guidance: Every student should take advantage of the opportunity to develop his abilities to his highest potential.

JAMES SPARKS, art: If beauty is in the eye of the beholder than it is beholding of me to observe that most teens are ignorant in the art of beholding.

CLEVE THRASHER, social studies: I tell it like it is!

NORMAN TRIPP, industrial arts audio visual director

ALONZO WALKER, math: Live your life and let others live theirs. Be as critical of yourself as you are of others

MISS PHYLLIS WALTERS, English, director of dramatics: Speak up.

MRS. MARY JO WARD, physical education

RICHARD O'BRIEN, guidance: I am at NHS to be of service to the students, that is to do everything that I can to help them solve their problems personal, social and educational.

WILLIAM PERT, business: The less you bet, the more you lose when you win.

JAMES POALSTON, physical education

MRS. MABEL PRITCHETT, English: Grant me wisdom to make proper choices and the grace and strength to bear the consequences.

JAMES RAY, English, director of publications: Curiosity makes the difference between life and living.

MISS SUE RITTER, English: Whatever is worth doing is worth doing well.

MRS. BEVERLY ROBINSON, English: Knowledge is power.

MISS KAROL RUBY, music: "No one can be called educated who will not do something that he would rather not do at the time it ought to be done." N.M. Butler

MRS. MILDRED RYAN, social studies: I operate on the premise that you are young adults, and until you prove to me otherwise, I'll treat you that way.

WILLIAM SALER, math department head: Mathematics is: hard work, sweat, frustrating, and fun, satisfaction, rewarding (financially sometimes). Some for everyone—alot for some.

ALBERT SPURLOCK, industrial arts, chairman: Teachers must help students identify and develop their skills and talents for youth is a nation's most valuable resource.

MISS MARY LOU STEED, foreign language: Laut und schoen und deutlich

DONALD STONE, science: Teaching success comes through student awareness of the necessity for goals, long range as well immediate.

MRS. PATRICIA THOMAS, home economics: Life is what you make it.

DON THOMPSON, English: He who laughs last didn't get the joke at first.

MRS. SARAH WEST, social worker: Each of us is as 3 persons: as we know ourselves, as other know us, and a third person not yet known to either.

MRS. JANEEN WILCOX, math: If I gave my students the grade they really deserve they would really complain.

MRS. LOTTIE WOOLRIDGE, math: "The end of study should be to direct the mind towards the enunciation of sound and correct judgements on all matters that come before it." Rene Descartes

BART YORK, industrial arts: Today's youth enjoy being individuals, Being individuals while having the ability to work successfully is important to me.

MRS. PHYLLIS YOUNG, English: "If a man does not keep pace with his companions, perhaps it is because he hears a different drummer." Thoreau

Patrons

Ginny
 (congratulations) a really really really, cool gift
 (was or was built)
 I hope to see you
 the better after you with. David & I have just now

Ginny
 Well, it was nice knowing you,
 and hope to see you sometime. I want you to take care of yourself while you are out of school. MAYBE DENNIS
 WILL TAKE CARE ALSO

Ginny, great,
 you were really funny, really a joy but (what else that means)
 Come back + visit
 Dennis

Ginny
 We met in the library and we got kicked out together and we've been friends since.
 How romantic! Well, see you around maybe.
 Love
 John Hansen

Ginny,
 Glad we became friends this year. The world needs
 more smart,
 beautiful, sweet
 & 'hip' people.
 Best of luck
 always. Smile
 & be happy!
 Love,
 Bonnie

Ginny,
 Our homeroom table
 wouldn't be the same without you & those guys. Good luck.

Ginny,

Too Bad you &
Dennis were together so long. I'll see you abt this summer
Chester

Ginny

To a real sweet and great looking girl.
You're a real nice friend in H. R. Good Luck always,

Giddy -
 The things you go through really are crazy! The best of luck wherever and whenever you go.
 Robin.
